Watson, Fire Chief, Dies as Retirement Is Ordered

Throat Ailment Is Fatal After Week in Hospital at Philadelphia.

Had Been Ailing Several Months

Attack on His Discipline Flared During Last Days of Regime.

Fire Chief George S. Watson is dead.

He died yesterday afternoon in the University of Pennsylvania Graduate Hospital, Philadelphia, where he had been confined less than a week with a severe throat ailment.

His death closely followed an announcement that he was slated for retirement—probably this week. Chief Watson had been in ill health for several months. He had not been on active duty for some time and was taken to the Philadelphia hospital last Wednesday.

The chief was 58 years old. Recent weeks have seen intermittent attacks against his regime and criticism of department disciplinary measures.

Rise Was Rapid.

Chief Watson was born March 30, 1876, in Cairo, Ill. He was first appointed to the Fire Department as chief clerk in 1906. His rise was rapid and in 1920 he was made chief engineer.

During his services in the department Chief Watson held positions as explosives licensing agent, chairman of the local board of selective service law, fire marshal and a member of the executive committee of the Citizens Central Committee on Conference for Limitation of Armaments.

Chief Watson saw duty at many of Washington's major fires. He led his men into the thick of fighting and often risked his life in battle against flames. He seemed to sense the proper thing to do in the control of a fire and was looked upon by his men as one of the country's greatest authorities on fire prevention and control.

Once Declined Medal.

His work at the Knickerbocker disaster in 1922 was lauded by city and Government officials. He was commended by the District Commissioners and was awarded the Giles-Griffen medal for bravery This, however, he declined and in its place was given a ribbon decoration.

Deputy Chief Engineer Charles

Conway's Hat In Senate Race

Tammany Foe Quits Relief Post; Says Roosevelt Backs Action.

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Thomas F. Conway, prominent attorney and former Democratic lieutenant governor, announced his candidacy today for United States Senator.

Conway, whose home is in Plattsburgh and who has law offices in New York, made his announcement in resigning as director of the National Emergency Council for the State.

A foe of Tammany Hall and an up-State Democratic leader for many years, Conway will seek the seat now held by Royal S. Copeland, whose term expires next year.

In his letter of resignation to Frank C. Walker, executive director of the National Emergency Council and close aid of President Roosevelt, Conway said:

"I may add that in personal consultation with the President, and for reasons stated herein, he approved my contemplated action."

Austria to Protest Nazi 'Intervention'

League Council Considers Problem Feb. 12.

Geneva, Feb. 4 (AP).—Newspapers here today published a statement that Austria would appeal to the League of Nations tomorrow against German intervention in Austrian affairs.

The council of the league, it was said, will be called into special session February 12 to consider the matter. League officials said they understood the Austrian cabinet might reach a decision tomorrow on a course of action.

Baron Pflugl, Austria's delegate to the league, asserted he did not know her intentions.

O. P. Powell, Pullman Chief, Dies.

Chicago, Feb. 4 (AP).—A heart attack after a week's illness was fatal today to Orville P. Powell, 66, assistant vice president and general manager of the Pullman Co.

Holdup Killers Club Two More In Virginia Raid

Three Who Slew Grocer in Colmar Manor Strike at Hoover Airport.

Speeding across the District after slaying a Colmar Manor, Md., grocer early yesterday, three bandits held up a filling station near Hoover Airport, Va., two hours later and escaped with $25 after a furious battle with two employes at the gas station, who were clubbed to unconsciousness.

Meanwhile, Washington police broadcast an alarm for a notorious local character whose photograph was identified as that of one of the three desperadoes. The bandit trio late Saturday night held up a filling station at 2713 Pennsylvania avenue as a prelude to the killing in nearby Maryland.

A Washington salesman and a young woman were arrested at noon yesterday as they entered a car near Fourteenth street and Rhode Island avenue northwest. The machine was similar to one seen near Colmar Manor late Saturday and police had been watching it. After considerable questioning they were released.

Angus H. Burch Slain.

As police of Washington, Virginia and Maryland concentrated on tracking the bandit group, funeral plans were being made for Angus H. Burch, 52, the grocer slain during a holdup attempt. Burch was believed to have attempted to reach a gun secreted behind his counter and was shot down.

The Virginia gas station employes who were beaten by the bandits are H. P. Ellis, 27, of Cherrydale, Va., and R. W. Lowe, of Falls Church.

The two men said the three robbers drove in and immediately drew blue steel pistols, the same type of weapons said by witnesses to have been used in the Colmar Manor slaying.

Grapple With Gunmen.

Both Ellis and Lowe grappled with the men, despite the menacing revolvers. Both were stunned by blows with the gun butts. Ellis and Lowe were taken to Emergency Hospital by nearby night club employes and treated for head lacerations.

After overpowering Ellis and Lowe, the three men rifled the cash register of about $25. Arlington County police learned that three men of the same description were seen an hour before on M street in Georgetown.

During the gas station holdup in Washington, about half an hour before midnight Saturday, the manager of the establishment and a customer were gagged and bound while loot of $70 and a watch was taken.

All witnesses to the crimes of the trio agree the men are all about 25 years of age. One is considerably taller than the others, is dressed in dark clothes and seems to be the leader, the witnesses said.

Pilsudski Is Nominated For Nobel Peace Prize

Warsaw, Poland, Feb. 4 (AP).—The nomination of Marshal Joseph Pilsudski, minister of war, as a candidate for the Nobel Peace Prize, was sent to the Nobel Foundation today by the law department of Jacellonian University.

The recommendation said Pilsudski's foreign policies promoted general peace.

Dollar Policy Hailed Boon To Business

Renewal of Confidence Seen Due to Gold Action of U. S.

Foreign Policy Group, However, Is Fearful of Currency War.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Taking advantage of Sunday's truce in the international currency imbroglio, the National Association of Manufacturers yesterday came forward with a report of its directors generally applauding President Roosevelt's "stabilization" of the dollar.

"Clarification of the Administration's monetary policy has improved business sentiment, stimulated confidence in the credit position of the Government and made possible industrial commitments for the future with a reasonable degree of safety."

Such was the keynote comment of Clinton L. Bardo, of Camden, N. J., president of the association, who added he expects, as a logical result to the ending of uncertainty, a lively pick-up in business, together with an increase in commodity prices.

Fear Currency War.

Concern for the effect of the revalued dollar on international affairs, was expressed, however, by the Foreign Policy Association, which fears that other nations will be driven to "defensive measures against the challenge of the cheapened dollar," thus provoking a currency war.

With $34,500,000 in gold bullion already on the high seas and many millions more awaiting transportation to this country, behavior of the dollar on foreign exchanges this week will be watched anxiously by Treasury experts, who have at their disposal $2,000,000,000 with which to "umpire" the game.

Although no part of this sum has been used, so far as can be learned, unpredictable developments within the early future may bring it to bear to force the dollar closer to parity by the purchase of other currencies. Since so many influences, particularly the return of timid capital, are now strengthening the dollar, however, it was thought the Treasury would await more normal conditions.

Peril to Gold Standard.

In its report the Foreign Policy Association pointed out there is no agreement that an increase in the price of gold will raise domestic prices. Moreover, it feels there is serious danger of "greatly accentuating international animosities" in the gold program.

If the current flood of returning capital, coupled with foreign funds, continues at the rapid pace of the last few days, reserves of the continent gold-standard countries might be strained. The Foreign Policy Association report gave the opinion France might be able to resist going off gold, but added "the positions of Holland, Switzer-

Wife and Children Watch Flier Crash

2 Killed as Looping Plane's Wing Breaks in Norfolk.

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 4 (AP).—Frank Snyder, 33, widely known stunt and racing pilot, and Frank Smith, 36, an electrician, were killed late today in the crash of a monoplane in which they had been looping.

A wing on the plane crumpled at 1,000 feet, and the ship crashed into a field about a quarter of a mile from the Tidewater Airport, which Snyder has been managing since it opened two years ago. Smith's wife and four children witnessed the accident.

Traylor Is Reported "Not Quite So Well"

Chicago, Feb. 4 (AP).—The condition of Melvin A. Traylor, banker stricken with pneumonia two weeks ago, showed a slight setback today, physicians said.

Dr. William R. Cubbins said there was no relapse, but that Traylor was "not quite so well." Temperature, pulse and respiration all showed small increases, shortly after daylight.

Bank Bandit Suspect Killed in Gang Trap

Assassins Set Ambush at Home of Chicago Public Enemy, Opening Fire as Victim Climbs Back Stairs in Fear of Life.

Chicago, Feb. 4 (AP).—Ernest Rossi, 37, wanted in Holland, Mich., for bank robbery, was shot to death today at the home of his brother-in-law, Lawrence Mangano.

Police Capt. John Stege said Rossi was suspected of membership in a gang of extortionists who had been victimizing West Side handbook operators and "small-time" gamblers.

Assassins who lay in wait in the back yard of the Mangano home sent charges of shotgun slugs into Rossi's back as the victim mounted the stairs.

Mangano, himself a public enemy, was not at home but his wife, Lucille, Rossi's sister, said indications were that two men had done the shooting.

As Mrs. Mangano and another sister, Mrs. Anna Paldo, and a nephew of Rossi's, Paul Labriola, reached the victim, a small automobile, which had been parked nearby, sped down the street.

That Rossi knew his life was in danger was indicated, police said, by the fact that recently he had used the back door habitually. Even his killers knew that. From the number of cigarette stubs found in the back yard it was apparent that the killers had waited several hours for their victim.

Rossi was to have appeared in criminal court on February 21 on a writ of habeas corpus to fight extradition to Michigan.

Stege revealed that Rossi also was suspected as the leader of the gang of armed men who robbed a safety deposit concern here of nearly $50,000 last year.

NRA Warned Cutting Output Perils Nation

Money Stabilization Also Is Urged by 11 Experts After Long Study.

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Setting forth the view that increasing and not decreasing productivity marks the way to prosperity, the report of the Columbia University commission on economic reconstruction, made public today, cautioned the NRA against "competitive limitation of output at the expense of the present and still more of the future National welfare."

Made after a year of intense survey and signed by 11 economists and sociologists, the report gave this admonition as its first recommendation:

"In the administration of the recovery program, special care should be taken to insure that the code-making facilities of the National recovery act should not be made a means for the competitive limitation of output by organized industries."

Says New Deal Permanent.

Prof. Robert M. MacIver, chairman of the commission appointed by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of the university, said the report is "sympathetic in general with the spirit of the New Deal and is convinced that it has come to stay • • •."

Three members of the commission withdrew from the work to join the Roosevelt Administration and did not sign the report. They are Prof. James H. Rogers, A. A. Berle, jr., and Dr. Leo Wolman.

Urging monetary stabilization without delay, the report appended this note:

"Since this statement was prepared the Government has taken measures toward the stabilization of the dollar which are in harmony with proposals in this report."

Flexible Works Urged.

Other recommendations include:

"That public works programs should, as a permanent policy, be planned and budgeted sufficiently far in advance to allow them to be conducted on a flexible schedule, being alternately expanded and

Athens, Feb. 4 (U.P.).—A rain of bank notes tossed recklessly from a hotel window by M. Ramos, Greek millionaire, caused turmoil in the street today as hundreds fought to catch the cash.

3 Youths Killed As Train Hits Auto

High School Athletes Are Ohio Crossing Victims.

Chillicothe, Ohio, Feb. 4 (AP).—Three high school athletes were killed instantly late today when their automobile was struck by a fast B. & O. freight train at an unguarded crossing. The dead are Charles Ludwig, jr., Gene Ferrell, and Don Conley, all about 18.

Ludwig and his father, Charles Ludwig, sr., superintendent of a paper mill, won the Central Ohio Father and Son Golf championship last summer.

Conley was a football and basket ball player and Ferrell held the Chillicothe City Tennis Singles championship.

U. S. Liner, Grounded In Victoria, Floated

Victoria, B. C., Feb. 4 (AP).—The American mail liner President Grant, which went aground last night in the outer harbor when outbound for the Orient, was refloated today with the aid of several tugs.

Within a short time it returned here and divers were sent down to examine the hull. The President Grant left Seattle yesterday and stopped here before sailing for Yokohama and Manila.

Defiant Cab Driver Found In East River

Strikers Deny Blame for N. Y. Riot; Charge "Frame-Up."

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—The body of an independent taxicab driver who defied strikers' orders to stay off the streets was found in his cab at the bottom of the East River today.

Residents of Astoria reported last night they saw a taxicab pushed or driven off a pier. Police began grappling and brought up the vehicle today with Owen Quinn, 51, dead behind the wheel.

Meanwhile the drivers and the companies selected committees of three to confer with Morris L. Ernst, an attorney, named as mediator by Mayor Fiorello H. Laguardia. After conferring for five hours little progress was reported.

The strikers sought to consolidate their position at a mass meeting at which speakers urged them to demand $15 weekly guarantees, elimination of the companies' "black lists," and abolition of the licensing of part-time hackmen, as well as 100 per cent of the receipts from a 5-cent fare tax, for which the strike originally was called.

William Gandall, president of the United Taxi Drivers Union, declared that 28,000 drivers have joined the strike with only about 4,000 independents outside the fold.

Gandall denied strikers were responsible for yanking passengers out of cabs in a midnight melee.

"No taxi man would throw a passenger out of a cab," Gandall said. "Any person throwing out a passenger must be an agent of the companies. The taxi men, if they did get violent, would only pull the driver out."

The day was one of peaceful picketing.

Doormen outside swanky Park avenue apartments and hostelries had to blow whistles loud and long to attract what few cabs were cruising about.

When passengers from the liner President Roosevelt—the first to dock since the strike was called—walked down the gangplank, they found only three cabs.

Roosevelt Studies Home Loan Set-up

New Message to Congress May Urge More Relief.

President Roosevelt wrote a "no engagement" notation on his callers' list yesterday, and devoted himself to quiet work in the White House study.

It was understood that, among other matters, the Chief Executive was giving study to the preparation of a message to Congress relating to the broadening of the Home Loan organization to include Federal financial assistance for those who wish to improve homes rather than build new ones, according to the Associated Press.

He has averaged about one message to Congress a week, following what has been described as a policy of letting Congress dispose of each individual request before a new one arrives.

Von Papen Voices Regard for French

Thankful They Sent Team to Horse Show.

Berlin, Feb. 4 (AP).—Entertaining foreign military horsemen today, former Chancellor Franz von Papen thanked the French government for sending a team to the equestrian tournament.

The cordiality of his tone was regarded as another evidence of the official desire to promote Franco-German conciliation.

"I've invariably found the first ones to forget misunderstandings among nations and to ignore political frontiers, are soldiers," Von Papen said. "I hope the tournament will improve relations between the peoples."

Paris Rioters Battle Police; Cabinet Filled

French Capital Is Still in Turmoil Over Chiappe Ouster.

Premier Issues Three Portfolios; Faces Test Tuesday.

Paris, Feb. 4 (AP).—Bonnefoy Sibour, successor to Jean Chiappe as head of the Paris police, was given a violent induction to office today, personally leading his forces in charges to subdue renewed Paris rioting.

Several hundred Royalists, chief element in recent public disorders growing out of the Stavisky scandal, together with a new Fascist group called "Francistes," attempted to parade and offered battle to Sibour's forces.

Cries of "Long live Chiappe! Long live the police!" mingled with shouts against the Daladier cabinet as the manifestants swarmed about the Paris Opera. Cafe owners, remembering violent clashes of a week ago, hastily cleared their terraces, and stores clapped down their shutters.

Several persons were arrested, and police held the demonstrators in check.

Chiappe Ouster Rocks City.

"Silent Edouard" Daladier made a spectacular show of sweeping out France's political house today after deposing Chiappe, debonair "Napoleon" of the Paris police.

The sudden ousting of the little Corsican was the most resounding blow in the shake-up.

The premier, however, patched up his cabinet with the replacement of three men and will appear in the Chamber Tuesday confident of increased support.

Former Premier Joseph Paul-Boncour agreed to take the post of Lieut. Col. Jean Fabry as minister of war; Paul Marchandeau accepted the portfolio of minister of the budget and finance, succeeding Francois Pietri, and Alexis Jaubert replaced Gustav Doussain as minister of technical instruction.

Refused Morocco Post.

By the figurative throwing of Chiappe's head to the Socialists, Daladier hoped to assure life of the cabinet. Chiappe was accused of being a friend of the late Serge Stavisky, whose financial operations resulted in the Bayonne pawnshop scandal. He was ordered to Morocco as resident general, but refused the transfer.

Refusing to engage in "polemics," Daladier said nothing would stop him from doing his "duty to the country."

Camille Chautemps, whose recent fall from the premiership was credited to Chiappe's benevolence toward street rioters, called Daladier's housecleaning "brutal."

He referred particularly to "the picturesque change" in police circles.

The shakeup shifted numerous prefects (governors) in French provinces and brought protests, particularly from Chiappe's friends, including Edouard Renard, who re-

First Case Found Where Theft's Just A Laughing Matter

Someone is going to have a good laugh.

But unless he is in the mood for laughing—or sleeping—police advise him not to tinker with a portable "laughing gas" anesthetic machine, stolen yesterday from the parked automobile of Dr. Charles Hyde, 2900 Cathedral avenue northwest.

Dr. Hyde said the machine, valued at $175, was taken from his car parked near the Washington Medical Building, 1801 I street northwest. The outfit, he said, is equipped with three cylinders of "laughing gas."

U. S. Craft Rescued, Towed Into Halifax

Halifax, N. S., Feb. 4 (AP).—The disabled American trawler Patrick J. O'Hara, which sent out distress signals Saturday, was safe in port today, having been towed in by the Canadian government steamer Aranmore.

When the O'Hara's signals first were heard, the tug Coalopolis sped out of Halifax, but was unable to locate her. Saturday night, the Aranmore located the vessel.

SENATOR HUGO L. BLACK, whose committee report on activities in connection with air mail contracts is awaited by the Senate to determine action.

Col. L. H. Brittin and G. L. Givvin Are Facing Action.

MacCracken Is Due Before Senate Bar at Noon.

Contempt proceedings against three more aviation company representatives and officials are expected to follow the appearance at noon today of William P. MacCracken, jr., former Assistant Secretary of Commerce in charge of aeronautics, before the Bar of the Senate.

Chairman Black, of the Senate Air Mail Investigating Committee, said last night he will submit today a full report of the examination of Col. L. H. Brittin, vice president of Northwest Airways, and Gilbert L. Givvin, a Washington representative of Western Air Express.

Members of the committee admitted yesterday they expected the Senate to take immediate action leading to contempt charges against Col. Brittin, Givvin, and Harris M. Hanshue, president of Transcontinental and Western Air Express.

MacCracken, arrested Friday night by Senate Sergeant at Arms Jurney for refusing to produce his office records relating to air mail contracts and for permitting some of these records to be abstracted while he and the records were under subpena, will face the bar of the Senate at noon.

May Postpone Questioning.

Questioning of the former Commerce Department official, who represents a number of aviation companies here as lawyer-lobbyist, probably will await presentation by Chairman Black of his committee's report on the testimony of Col. Brittin and Givvin.

Black is not expected to introduce a resolution calling for arrest of the other three, as he did in the case of MacCracken.

"The committee hasn't the right to cite anyone for contempt, but merely to present the facts and make recommendations," Black said last night.

However, if "appropriate action" is not forthcoming from the Senate when it hears Black's report, he may act.

"Prosecutor Role" Avoided.

RFC Approves Gigantic Bond Refund Plan

Two Baltimore Companies In Record-Breaking Operation.

Baltimore, Feb. 4 (AP).—Approval by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of one of the largest refunding operations ever attempted in the United States was announced today by officials of the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. and Maryland Casualty Co., both of Baltimore.

The RFC, according to the announcement, agreed to lend mortgage companies whose obligations are guaranteed by the two Baltimore surety companies sufficient funds to make a 30 per cent cash distribution to bondholders.

The refunding plan applies to approximately $82,000,000 par value of bonds secured by mortgages having the guarantee of the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. and the Maryland Casualty Co.

Millions for Stock.

The RFC also has agreed to advance to the Maryland Casualty Co. the necessary funds for the purchase of $7,500,000 of that company's preferred stock. The Federal agency also tentatively agreed to purchase $4,000,000 of a new issue of preferred stock which the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. proposes to issue.

The net result of the advances was explained as providing for the distribution to bondholders of the mortgage company obligations of roughly $17,300,000 in cash. The cash payments will be made as soon as details connected with issuance of new bonds and debentures under the terms of the plan can be completed.

The RFC has required that the new securities to be issued under the general refunding plan be qualified under the securities act of 1933. Registration statements covering the securities were filed with the Federal Trade Commission by the various Rome, Feb. 4 (AP).—A large group of prelates and diplomats attended the Episcopal consecration of Mgr. Alberto Levame, new apostolic nuncio to the Republic of San Salvador and Honduras, at Pio Latino College today.

Cardinal Gasparri and Archbishops Pizzardo and Zonghi presided, attended by Archbishop Francesco Orozco, of Guadalajara, Mexico, and the Ministers of Honduras, Nicaragua and Venezuela.

Nazis' Secret Arrests Bared

Pastor's Wife and 12 Men Jailed in Religious Row, Released.

Dresden, Germany, Feb. 4 (AP).—Seven opposition pastors, two vicars and three laymen, and the wife of one of the pastors were arrested last Thursday and released from police headquarters only yesterday, it became known today.

The arrests were made on charges of "distributing leaflets inimical to the state." The prisoners were placed in solitary confinement. They included the Rev. Mr. Hahn and his wife and two church superintendents.

A declaration of the Pastors' Emergency Federation, which is opposing Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller's work for a unified Protestant church, disavowing Mueller, was contained in the leaflets.

All the prisoners were released yesterday with orders, they said, to observe silence.

In many parts of the country, opposition ministers have been suspended by Dr. Mueller. However, since all communication between Emergency Federation pastors is regarded as precarious, it may be some days before complete data on suspensions will be in the hands of federation officials.

Spain Is Expected To Free 4 Today

Order for Release Fails to Reach Mallorca.

Madrid, Feb. 4 (AP).—Release of four Americans who were pardoned yesterday after being sentenced to prison for assaulting a civil guard at Palma, Mallorca, where they are in jail, is expected tomorrow. An official order for their release has not yet been received at Palma.

Clinton B. Lockwood, of West Springfield, Mass., one of the four, said by telephone today that their future plans were uncertain.

The pardons were issued on the condition that the four—Lockwood, his wife, Roger F. Mead, of New York, and Edmund A. Blodgett, of Stamford, Conn., leave the Balearic Islands.

Actress Stages a Real Rescue With Not a Reel to Record It

Hollywood, Feb. 4 (AP).—Toby Wing, a chorus beauty who learned to swim to obtain a featured role she wanted, has cashed in on her aquatic knowledge as the heroine of an accident that wasn't called for in a film script.

Miss Wing, with Ida Lupino, young British actress, and eight other girls was frolicking in a jungle lake yesterday on location. The action called for her to swing across the water on a long rope of vines.

As she swung in a long arc, Mary Tom Blackwood, film extra, who had just dived from a tree, came up and caught the full force of Miss Wing's feet on her nose. Miss Blackwood, unconscious and with her nose fractured, sank in 10 feet of water.

Richard Arlen, who once served as a life guard at St. Paul, was ashore on the far side. He leaped into the water fully clothed and began to swim to the spot where Miss Blackwood sank.

But Miss Wing stayed on her ropes until the back swing brought her over the spot where she had struck the film extra. She let loose, dived and collided with the unconscious form. She brought the girl to the surface and swam to shore.

Miss Blackwood was taken to a hospital. Physicians said her condition was not serious.

Soldier Held, Loot Retrieved In Holdups Near White House

A United States Army private was arrested yesterday as the suspected gunman in two downtown hold-ups.

He was apprehended in the uniform of a cavalryman less than 10 minutes after Mrs. Isabella Poss, of 2926 Tenth street northeast, reported she was robbed at Fourteenth street and Constitution avenue northwest.

She said a uniformed soldier accosted her, and brandishing a gun, took $5 from her purse. A few moments later Mrs. Poss hailed Policeman Samuel Davis, driving a patrol car.

After cruising about downtown streets, Mrs. Poss is said to have identified a soldier walking near the White House as the man who robbed her. He was arrested.

Meanwhile, Marion H. Hedges, of 305 Dorset street, Chevy Chase, Md., reported he also was robbed by a soldier while walking near the same intersection. His billfold containing $18 was taken, Hedges said.

Both Mrs. Poss and Hedges, police said, identified the soldier, who gave the name of Frank Elwood Green, 26, stationed at the Post Exchange Headquarters, 1800 C street northwest, as the holdup man.

The stolen money, billfold and an Army revolver were found in Green's possession, police reported. He was held for investigation.

Johnson Urged To Order Curb On Price Fixing

Abuses Are Cited by Aid in Asking Suspension of Code Provision.

(Associated Press.)

A recommendation for immediate temporary suspension of provisions in codes which make for unauthorized price fixing was submitted yesterday to High S. Johnson by NRA's division administrator, Arthur D. Whiteside, in a partial report on price increases since the Blue Eagle program began.

Whiteside urged that the "waiting period" in open price provisions of codes—whereby a member of an industry sets a price and makes it public to his competitors five or ten days before it becomes effective, allowing powerful firms to put pressure on him to raise them to their own level—be suspended from the majority of codes.

He advised, however, that it be allowed to continue in a few codes for purposes of further observation, so that a clinical study may be made before final conclusions are reached.

Price Fixing Revealed.

The proposal, accompanied by other important recommendations resulted from a public hearing several weeks ago in which complaints of profiteering under NRA disclosed extensive price fixing by several industries. Behind the complaints shaped up a volume of dissatisfaction which spurred the recovery unit into quick corrective measures.

Already Johnson has decreed that no more waiting periods shall be written into open price listing provisions of codes pending a final decision, and he has suspended a number of them during the past two weeks. Whiteside's new plan would call for an order of suspension for virtually all those in the 257 codes now in effect.

Other proposals included:

That abolition of "reasonable cash discounts" by many groups in the effort to get rid of unfair discounts made by many to land orders, is not advisable, since proper discounts constituted "a long and widely acknowledged trade custom with sound justification."

Favors Mass Production.

That elimination or reduction of quantity discounts to universities, State and city governments and hospitals should be reconsidered as many industries catering to these classes have been built up on quantity discounts "amply justified by the economics of mass production."

"That provisions limiting sales of seconds or inferior grades of goods should be reexamined because, though aimed at widespread abuses, they may be inadvisable for three reasons: Manufacturing processes, which turn out many defective units would have unduly high cost on first grade production if all seconds had to be thrown away; there may be real demand for second grade in products easily broken, lost, or stolen, making durability a secondary item; if quality standardization can be adopted so that the customer recognizes the grade purchased there can be no objection to seconds at lower prices."

Survey Is Urged.

Whiteside also concluded that fixing cost as the rock bottom price may in some instances "dictate a price level higher than the customers should pay, and higher than the industry can maintain in the long run."

The report strongly advised that the economic division of NRA be put to making a continuing study of what has happened in industries under NRA and what used to occur before, with particular attention to the comparative results of various types of price rules.

So that this could be done free of prejudice, he recommended that the economist staff have no direct contact with the industries investigated but be made to deal through routine NRA organization.

Fire Chief Watson Is Taken by Death

Schrom becomes acting head of the department. Notified of Chief Watson's death, Schrom declared:

"It comes as a great surprise. I am extremely sorry to hear it. Chief Watson was a good man."

Schrom, however, was unable to indicate a possible successor. He also becomes of retirement age soon.

"I remain as head of the department until further orders," he said.

Carrington Second in Line.

Schrom is ranking member of the department in seniority. Deputy Chief John Carrington is second in rank, and Battalion Chief Charles Gill, recently rumored as Chief Watson's successor, ranks third.

Gill, however, has held the title of chief over a longer period and has been strongly mentioned as the next department commander.

When Chief Watson was under attack by the City Firefighters Association and its counsel, Paul E. Jamieson, Representative Virginia E. Jenckes (Democrat), Indiana, threatened to demand a Congressional investigation. The matter has been pending before the House District Committee.

Discipline Attacked.

Following charges of too severe disciplinary penalties upon members of the Department, the District Commissioners have awaited Watson's return and a detailed report on incidents cited. It was indicated pressure had been brought to bear from Capitol Hill.

Only last week the commissioners finally decided to retire the chief on the basis of physical disability.

Chief Watson lived at 3028 Fourteenth street northwest. He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Jane S. Watson, and his wife, Mrs. Bessie L. Watson.

Capital Bartender of Old Days Writes About the Art of Mixing

Rector's and Shanley's of New York Live Again in Little Book.

Recalling the mellow era of fast-stepping horses and willow plumes, when the mixing of a drink was an art, Earl Bismark Chewning, of 1113 M street northwest, a bartender whose experience began the decade before the World War, has compiled a volume of famous recipes.

There are more than 200 of them—ranging from absinthe aperitifs to gin rickeys, some the favorites of the famous people Chewning served when he stood, garbed immaculately in white, behind the bar at Rector's and Shanley's in New York. In those days, above the clatter of hoofs sometimes rose the brief, angry honking of automobile horns as drivers squeezed rubber bulbs violently.

Chewning calls his thin book

"The Bartender's Reminder." It is dedicated to the young men of today "who are engaged in the resurrected profession of drink mixing."

"Poor things," sighed Chewning yesterday, "they are working on their blind sides. They know so little about their trade. Why, even we old-timers got rusty during the last 14 years."

Chewning knows whereof he speaks when he talks of drinks. Often George M. Cohan stopped to sip a whisky lemonade at his bar. Victor Moore, the actor, was fond of frappes, and Chewning knew how to make them. Ziegfeld himself sometimes dropped by for a bracer.

At the Old Vienna bar, on the boardwalk at Atlantic City, Chewning frequently "shook them up" for Battling Nelson and his cronies.

Drinking in the machine age is mechanical and not as leisurely as once it was, in what he terms a gentler age, Chewning says.

"Goodness only knows what shall happen to us," he remarked. "The bars are wheeled about now, spic and span and odorless, and we buy beer in drug stores. Perhaps tomorrow bars will be tended by robots, controlled by electricity.

"There never can be robot drinkers, however."

Actors, philosophers, scholars and artists drank the most exotic wines and liqueurs, according to Chewning. They sat, comfortably sipping, while the world slipped down the toboggan of time outside. Men of action drank whiskies and gulped them straight, using water as chasers.

"What it shall be tomorrow I don't know," Chewning said. "But there was something about the odor of the old-time bars that brought pictures of roses, hoop skirts, cutlasses and palmettoes, falling, like a troupe of tumblers, through a fellow's mind."

Sapulpa Battle Toll 5 as Third Outlaw Dies

Soldiers Leave After Only Prisoner Taken in Fight Is Saved From Mob.

Sapulpa, Okla., Feb. 4 (AP).—The guns of Sapulpa officers today had cut three from the list of wanted Oklahoma bad men, but their own ranks had lost two who took part Saturday in one of the bloodiest battles between the law and the lawless the State has seen in years.

Eldon Wilson, the robber-fugitive, who was brought to jail with four bullet wounds, died this morning.

The others killed:

Tom Brumley, 48, Sapulpa police chief; Charles P. Lloyd, 32, a patrolman; Aussie Elliott, a gunman, and Raymond Moore, known to police only as an accomplice of Elliott and Wilson.

National Guard Leaves.

Sapulpa, boiling with emotion last night, today was as quiet as any town of 10,000 on Sunday as a troop of National Guardsmen moved back to Tulsa. The guard, after establishing a military zone around the court house to prevent mob violence to Wilson, left at 8 a. m.

Lee Davis, at whose farm home the shooting occurred, was held in jail at Tulsa for safekeeping. He had been spirited away from the police headquarters here when a throng crowded about the building.

Credit for preventing violence was given Sebe Christian, county attorney, and Sheriff Willis Strange and Deputies Wesley Gage and Floyd Sellers, the latter three survivors of the fight.

Fifth Man Arrested.

Efforts to obtain a better identification of Moore were being made. He was to be fingerprinted and the marks sent to Washington.

A fifth man, whose name was given as George Roberts, was arrested during the night.

It was known that officers had been tipped another member of the outlaw band was supposed to be in waiting with a car near the Davis home, to aid escape if officers approached.

Elliott and Wilson each were under 50-year sentences for armed robbery. They once were members of the Charles (Pretty Boy) Floyd Band.

Actress' Death Puzzles Police

Clews Sought in Circus Woman's Home; Farm Hand Disappears.

Tell City, Ind., Feb. 4 (AP).—Perry County authorities today continued their search of the home of Miss Alice Martin, former circus trapeze performer, in an effort to solve the mystery surrounding her death.

The body of the woman was found yesterday in a shallow grave on her 150-acre farm near Derby, overlooking the Ohio River.

Meanwhile authorities pressed the hunt for Ernest Wright, 32, a farm hand, who disappeared shortly after officers began a search for Miss Martin.

Carmi Badger, 21, a stepbrother of Wright, still is being held for questioning.

Miss Martin, who was 52, was with Barnum and Bailey's circus and traveled extensively with it in Europe and South America. She retired several years ago but had planned to reenter the show business next spring.

signed as prefect of the Seine district in sympathy. Mme. Renard, the former Mrs. Marie Kulker Winburn, widow of Marcel Winburn, of New York, is a prominent member of the American colony.

Actors Threaten Strike.

Actors of the Comedie Francaise threatened to strike because Manager Emile Fabre was ousted for producing Shakespeare's Coriolanus, whose lines fitted too aptly to France's political muddle and rocked the citizens with laughter at the expense of the uncomfortable government.

Georges Thome, poet and head of the Surete Generale, was given Fabre's job.

Chiappe, as much a Parisian as Jimmy Walker was a New Yorker, said he "sticks" in Paris. He is reported planning to seek a seat in the Chamber, which would enable him to battle his political enemies from the floor of Parliament.

The police prefecturate was in a turmoil as he and Mme. Chiappe, who have spent a fortune in police charities, moved from their home after the unheralded assumption of power by Sibour, who slept on an army cot hastily brought to the office.

Police Scatter Veterans.

Police dispersed a meeting of 300 war veterans in front of Clemenceau's monument in the Champs Elysees.

While the Royalists, headed by the famous sculptor, Maxime Real del Sarte, were preparing for their demonstration against the ouster of Chiappe, Sarte's statue of the late Marshal Foch was officially unveiled at Pau.

Gen. Maxime Weygand, chief of the French army, who presided at the ceremonies, told the crowd "we are living in difficult times, when risks are serious."

He cited Foch as exemplifying the performance of duty, "the notion of which has never been so obscure nor the will to follow it so weak."

New NRA Court Rule Due Today

Highest Tribunal to Decide New York Right to Fix Milk Prices.

The Supreme Court today may decide for the second time on the right of a government to enact recovery laws, according to the Associated Press.

The test this time arises from New York State's milk price fixing law. The court has had the case under consideration for many weeks.

A decision favorable to the State would match the previous action of the high court in holding legal, by a five-to-four vote, the Minnesota mortgage moratorium act, under which that State temporarily suspended contracts affecting title to real estate sold under mortgage foreclosure.

Like the Minnesota case, the New York decision will concern more than the single State. Price fixing laws similar to the New York act are in effect in Connecticut, Florida, Ohio, New Jersey, Vermont and Wisconsin.

Trade Leaders Credit Upturn To New Dollar

Renewal of Confidence Is Seen Due to U. S. Gold Action.

land and Belgium are clearly precarious."

"Foreign nations are bound to resent a persistent and relentless offer of cheap American supplies, unaccompanied by a proportionate increase in demand for foreign products," the report said, linking trade with the depressed dollar.

Upturn Is Seen.

The symposium of the manufacturers' association, concerned with the domestic situation, was more cheerful. Almost all opinions stressed the importance of "dissipating uncertainty and rebuilding confidence," which followed even qualified stabilization of the currency.

"There is evidence on all sides, in all branches of business, of a very definite upturn in the last two weeks, particularly the last week," wrote Charles R. Hook, president of the American Rolling Mill Co., Middleton, Ohio.

"I am not very enthusiastic about some of the weird propositions coming out of Washington," replied John B. Berryman, president, the Crane Co., Chicago, "but as far as the currency is concerned, it seems to me that stabilization with gold at any point was better than uncertainty. * * * The country seems to be indifferent.

"The 'New Deal' has knocked all our old-fashioned ideas about the sanctity of contracts into a cocked hat, has violated the rights of citizens guaranteed by the Constitution, is piling up enormous taxes and is building a bueraucracy which we shall have difficulty in shaking off."

Another Indorsement.

Approval of definite revaluation of the dollar came from another quarter, in the report of the Columbia University Commission on Economic Reconstruction. Prepared before President Roosevelt announced his action, the report was issued with a note to the effect this was in harmony with its proposals.

"Internationally," the report said, "the primary requirements are the raising of world prices, the reduction of trade barriers and the reconstruction of a world monetary system * * *."

The Administration hopes to set the world gold price at President Roosevelt's $35-an-ounce price. Until some order comes from present chaotic conditions, however, it was apparent that the natural relationship of the revalued dollar to the pound and gold franc can not be determined.

Bomb Hurling, Strikes Spread Terror in Cuba

Home of U. S. Aid Blasted; One Slain, Five Shot by Soldiers.

Havana, Feb. 4 (AP).—Intermittent bombings and shootings last night and today, coupled with strike difficulties, brought terror to Havana and new troubles to the young government of President Carlos de Mendieta.

An unidentified man, apparently a Spaniard, was killed and five persons wounded when soldiers fired on employes of the Dependientes Spanish hospital who threatened to attack a group of federated physicians visiting the hospital.

A bomb exploded in an apartment house in which Dorsey Fisher, United States vice consul, and the British vice consul live. A brother of Pelayo Cuervo, sub-secretary of the interior, was injured.

Three other bombings did slight damage.

Skeleton forces continued to maintain partial light and power service, following the walkout of employes of the Cuban Electric Co. when its plants were returned to the company by the government.

Executives of the company claimed more employes were returning to work. Rafael Giraud, whom the workers wanted named general manager, and other strike leaders were reported under arrest at Principe. Company spokesmen indicated they would stand firm on their designation of Federico Porro Orfila, a Cuban, as general manager.

President Mendieta last night signed constitutional statutes setting up a provincial government.

A delegation for the Cuban Bar Association called at the palace today and threatened a general lawyers' strike if Mendieta modifies the decree of former President Ramon Grau San Martin prohibiting aliens from practising in Cuba.

Military authorities at Camaguey removed Gov. Fernandez Barreto, a Grau supporter.

Man Is Stabbed With Ice Pick

Hotel Fight Puzzles Police Here; Victim Near Death Names Attacker.

Stabbed with an ice pick over the heart, Otto Schroeder, 32, engineer at the Martinque Hotel, 1211 Sixteenth street northwest, was reported near death in Emergency Hospital last night.

Unable to discover any motive for the attack, police sought another hotel employe named by Schroeder as his assailant.

Schroeder was stabbed during an altercation in a basement room of the hotel. Indications of a struggle were found. The room was in disorder, police reported, and Schroeder was semiconscious on the floor.

He said his attacker was badly beaten about the face, but was unable to tell police how the argument began. Sounds of the struggle attracted hotel officials, who summoned the Fire Department Rescue Squad.

When these anniversaries fall on week-days he treats them much as any other business day, going about his duties as technical adviser to the Pan-American Airways, for which he and his wife recently made a 30,000-mile aerial survey tour.

This being Sunday, the colonel was understood to have spent it with his wife and their young son at the Morrow estate in Englewood, N. J.

Pastor's Death Laid to 2 Boys With 2 Women

All Confess, Assert Police, Puzzling Over Motives in Indiana Mystery.

Indianapolis, Feb. 4 (AP).—Two women and two boys were held here today for the murder of the Rev. Gaylord Saunders, 36, former pastor of a Wabash, Ind., Methodist Episcopal Church. Chief of Police Michael Morrissey said all four had confessed.

One of the women was Mrs. Naomi Saunders, widow of the slain preacher. The other was Mrs. Mabel Balke, a nurse who attended Mrs. Saunders during a recent illness.

The youths are Theodore Mathers and Masel Roe, each 19 years old.

Mixed Motives Puzzle Police.

Police puzzled over the confessions which seemed to present a strange mixture of motives. The pastor's body was found here Friday in his car which had been parked on a street with the motor running. He had been shot in the back of the head.

Saunders and Mather were students at an embalming school here. Saunders only a week ago resigned his pastorate at the Wabash church. He had been attending the school for some time and traveled to Wabash on week-ends.

According to Chief Morrissey, Mathers said he and Mrs. Saunders decided on the murder three weeks ago.

Pastor "Taken for Ride."

Last Thursday night the three men went for an automobile ride into the country. They stopped and Mathers is said to have shot the minister as he sat in the front seat with Roe. They then brought the body back to Indianapolis. The chief said Mathers took Saunders' watch and ring to make it appear the man had been killed in a robbery.

Police said Mathers and Mrs. Saunders both said fear of the minister caused them to plot the murder.

Mrs. Balke also was said to have declared Saunders' mind had been affected during the last few weeks and that members of his family lived in constant fear of him.

Funeral services were held at Wabash today. The body was to be brought to Indianapolis for cremation.

Labor Board Accepts Fight

May Start Taking Census of 10,000 Weirton Workers Today.

Weirton, W. Va., Feb. 4 (AP).—The first test of power in the crisis between the steel corporations and the National Labor Board is expected to take place in Weirton this week—possibly tomorrow.

Edward Keightly, a labor board investigator, is on the scene. He expects to be joined by others with orders to conduct a house-to-house canvass of the steel concern's 10,000 employes.

Officials say E. T. Weir, chairman of the Weirton Steel Corporation, discussed a proposed poll in a recent conference with President Roosevelt, but told the President he believed such a step would only confuse the situation; that the company already had pledged its faith and is under contract with the present employes' representation group.

The President's order directing taking of the poll came as a surprise among steel officials, who had believed another conference would be held between the President and Weir prior to such an order.

Senator Barbour Sees Dangers in New Deal

Princeton, N. J., Feb. 4 (U.P.).—The Democratic Administration will soon have to decide "where the Government is going to stop in its control of the private affairs of the individual," Senator W. Warren Barbour, of New Jersey, declared in an address here before the Princeton Republican Club.

"I fear that when reform legislation, which may become permanent, is hurriedly passed under the guise of recovery or relief legislation a misstep of serious magnitude, fraught with many possible dangerous consequences, may be the result," he said.

Cut in Cuban Sugar Tariff Is Due Soon

Administration Plans to Extend New Deal for Mendieta.

With the fateful step of recognition of the Cuban Mendieta government behind him, President Roosevelt is believed ready to throw it the necessary prop for its continued existence—a new deal in sugar.

Out of a series of conferences has come clear indication the Administration is agreed on a definite policy, which looks to the regulation of sugar, both in regard to domestic production and foreign importation, under the AAA.

This would be accomplished by amendment of the agricultural adjustment act to incorporate sugar among the basic commodities, thus paving the way to organization of the industry under a code which would limit production and allot imports by means of the quota system.

Statement Anticipated.

To this end President Roosevelt is expected to issue a public statement or message to Congress during the early part of this week. This would stamp as an Administration measure the pending Costigan bill hastening its enactment.

Those attending a White House conference during the latter part of the week, in which all but details was settled, included Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, Assistant Secretary Rexford G. Tugwell, Agricultural Administrator Chester C. Davis, Jerome Frank, AAA counsel, and Secretary of State Cordell Hull and Assistant Secretary Sumner Welles.

Tariff Slash Seen.

The presence of the State Department officials, particularly Mr. Welles, recent Ambassador to Cuba, emphasized the belief the Administration is inclined to relax present tariff barriers on Cuban sugar by adooting the quota system and curtailing domestic production. Any change in policy, it was pointed out, necessarily would affect all producers of sugar, including the Philippines.

Another conference of legislative leaders with the Agriculture and State Department officials was held Saturday in the office of Senator Joseph T. Robinson, of Arkansas, the Democratic leader. Since this Government's support has been given the new Cuban regime, now encountering its first difficulties, indications were the Administration thinks the time opportune to lend it more material backing.

NRA Warned Outp Cuts Peril Nation

contracted in accordance with the needs of the business situation and thus serving as a stabilizing influence.

"To secure the advantages of economic equilibrium it is particularly necessary to regulate large-scale corporations and such organizations as exert any degree of monopolistic control over prices. This regulation should be directed not only to the price-fixing policies of such organizations, but also to their methods of financing, accumulating and investing reserves * * *.

"It is no less necessary to regulate all organizations which are concerned with the supply of capital and credit or with the business of investment. Investment houses and commercial banks should be entirely separated. The banking system should be unified and made subject to definite Federal supervision. Federal incorporation, involving membership in the Federal Reserve System, should be obligatory on all banks of deposit.

"Internationally, the primary requirments are the raising of world prices, the reduction of trade barriers and the reconstruction of a world monetary system. There is no essential opposition between these requirements and the requirements of a National policy * * *. The prevalent ideal of economic nationalism should certainly not be regarded as implied in the principle of a planned National economy. We recommend, therefore, that, with due regard to the maintenance of the standards established under the NRA and the AAA, the United States should pursue agreements for reciprocal tariff reductions.

"We recommend that as soon as feasible, and subject to prices being raised sufficiently internally, the United States should go on record as ready to cooperate with the leading nations in a plan for reconstruction and maintenance of an international monetary standard.

"Finally we recommend that a National social-economic council, of a purely advisory nature, should be set up and equipped with adequate facilities for research * * * with the duty of recommending to the President and Congress such measures as in its judgment would contribute to the balanced economic development of the country."

In addition to the chairman, the report was signed by James W. Angell, Joseph W. Barker, John M. Clark, Arthur D. Gayer, Alvin H. Hansen, Alvin Johnson, Wesley C. Mitchell, Harlow S. Person, George Soule and Josef Schumpeter.

Initial Artistic Depiction of Folk Lore Of America Attempted by CWA Sculptor

Gigantic figures of American folk lore are being carved by Julian Lee Rayford, Alabame sculptor, working here under the CWA. On the left is a working model of a bas-relief of Paul Bunyan, the great woodsman, and his blue ox, Babe. At right, John Henry, the Negro steel driver, who built all the bridges, tunnels and railroad tracks, according to legend. Rayford is shown in insert.

Paul Bunyan, That Mighty Woodsman, Subject in One of 10 Panels.

A 25-year-old sculptor is working night and day in a small back room on Twenty-first street northwest in the first attempt to give artistic expression to the National folk lore of America.

He is Julian Lee Rayford, of Alabama, employed here by the Public Works of Art project of the Civil Works Administration. He declares that the work he is doing is the most valuable sculpture in present day America. The only thing American, he asserts, that has been done in our National sculpture previously are portraits of Americans and "a few half-hearted attempts at interpreting 'American-indian.'"

Rayford's project is a sculptural interpretation of ten subjects out of American folk lore. These panels are to be 7 feet high by 3 feet in width. They are to be carved in relief and colored. There will be a more extensive utilization of color in these panels than has ever been seen in American sculpture before, Rayford declares, but he insists that under the color his forms are perfectly sculptural.

The subjects are Paul Bunyan, the great woodsman, the greatest man who ever lived, according to American mythology; John Henry, the dreaming Negro steel driver, "the most natural man who ever lived;" Davy Crockett, the pioneer martyr who has attained mythical proportions in the American mind; Uncle Remus, the great story teller; Casey Jones, the supreme locomotive engineer, and Mark Twain, as a steamboat pilot.

Two Legends Portrayed.

In addition to these six heroic supermen there are panels of two legends and two folk songs. The first legend is one that is still growing along the Gulf Coast. This is the great cottonmouth superstition—that the water moccasin worships the sun with open white mouth, and looks so much like a lily that people have been bitten trying to pluck the supposed flower.

The second legend is the Jumping Frog of Calaveras County, Calif.—the story which established Mark Twain as a humorist. The first folk song is the "Yankee Skipper." The second song, "The Springfield Mounting," is the oldest authentically American folk song, according to Rayford.

Rayford at present is working on scale models and sketches. When enough of these are completed, they are to be placed on exhibit at the National Office of the CWA art project, where members of Congress will be invited to interview the young Alabama sculptor about his work.

House Site Proposed

It is the young artist's hope that his work will be placed on the lobby of the new House Office Building. He believes this should be done because his project, in expressing so universally the American folk lore, should be a permanent part of the life of the American people.

John Henry, according to Rayford's scheme of the American folk lore poem, not only typifies the spirit of the laboring masses in America, but, symbolically, is the great man who laid down all the railroad tracks, built all the bridges, dug all the tunnels, and put down all the foundations. All this work was done with a hearty song, a song, for all its joy, tinged with sadness, according to legend.

Casey Jones is the man who invented railroading, the locomotive and the electric light. This is related in a poem by Rayford, which goes on to say that a young butcher boy on the train, named Tom Edison, took Casey's idea and developed it for the natives and got all the credit. The credit, Rayford's poem asserts, should go to Casey Jones. Mark Twain should have the credit, he says, for inventing the steamboat and catfish. Uncle Remus found the means to tame wild animals, in addition to starting the first zoos, circuses, and theaters in America, he avers.

Bunyan the Greatest Hero.

Paul Bunyan is the greatest hero of all. He decorated the continent with mountains and lakes. He created the Mississippi River, the Missouri River, the Red River, and Rocky Mountains, the Alleghanies and Appalachians. With his own hands he dug out the Great Lakes, Puget Sound and the Great Salt Lake. The inventor of trees, according to the legend, he planted all the trees in America.

Bunyan was accompanied on all his great projects in the wilderness by Babe, his Blue Ox. It is said that God used so much blue in coloring Babe that thereafter the sky remained pale. The length between Babe's horn tips was 42 ax handles and 1 tobacco box. The tobacco box was lost, precluding the record of an accurate measurement, but it is believed that the length of the tobacco box was about 756 feet.

Babe, it is said, was so big that Bunyan had to carry a field glass to see what the ox's hind feet were doing. Lightning Bill, the Blacksmith, would sink up to his knees in solid rock before he could get the shoes on Babe's feet.

Also Quite a Tracker.

Paul Bunyan also was the greatest tracker who ever lived. In fact, he invented tracking. Once he smelled a moose and he tracked that moose right back to where it was born.

Hitherto, these folk heroes have been treated not only too humorously, but have been debased in the mind of the public, through comic interpretation, until they have lost their true meaning, Rayford declares.

The Bunyan relief has been compared by many who have seen it with some father of the gods, Jupiter or a Norse god, while the John Henry has been likened to a dreaming prophet.

Rayford hopes to give a personal interpretation of his project for President Roosevelt.

All Good Nazis Eat Scanty Sunday Dinners to Aid Needy

One-Course Meal Is Made A Ritual; $5,386,000 Collected.

Berlin, Feb. 4 (AP).—Good Nazis today partook of their one-course Sunday dinners of pea soup with pork or green beans and mutton, or bouillon and potatoes, with a special devotion.

Ordained by the government to swell the winter relief fund, this monthly meal took on the flavor of a ritual.

An officially inspired statement called it a "sacrificial meal," as persons were asked to turn over what they normally spend for dinner to the relief fund.

The government plans to install the monthly one-course Sunday dinner as a permanent institution. Hitherto collections were designed for winter relief, but in the future they will go toward year-around charity funds.

One hundred and thirty thousand men and women carrying tin boxes and long lists knocked at Berlin doors to take in the collections. Berlin and Dusseldorf led in generosity with an average of 9.7 pfennigs (nearly 4 cents) per person collected.

Cavalry officers from France, Sweden, Switzerland and Ireland, here to see the German equestrian tournament, joined with the rest of Germany in eating the one-course dinner. They dined with Gen. Wener von Blomberg, minister of the interior.

The dinner was served from a big pot standing on an iron tripod in the middle of the table, from which a cook ladled out portions.

Collections early tonight totaled 14,000,000 marks (approximately $5,386,000).

Coughlin Calls For Higher Pay; Sets Example

NRA Minimum of 80 Cents With 30-Hour Week Advocated.

Detroit, Feb. 4 (AP).—Terming the National recovery act "not the end but only the beginning of a huge industrial modification," the Rev. Father Charles E. Coughlin today called for a change in its provisions which would fix minimum wages at 80 cents an hour and maximum hours at 30 a week.

Mass production, he said, had increased so far beyond purchasing power that "40 cents an hour is slavery."

At the same time Father Coughlin announced he proposed to increase the wages of men working on the new Church of the Shrine of the Little Flower, of which he is pastor, as well as clerks employed in his office by 10 per cent effective tomorrow.

Wage Statistics Quoted.

Father Coughlin's weekly talk, which was entitled "The Problem of Unemployment," was broadcast over an independent radio hook-up.

Before going into a lengthy presentation of statistics to show that wages gradually have declined as production increased, Father Coughlin made one brief reference to the contemplated stabilization of the dollar and warned against "stabilization with the British pound as it is at present."

Because of the difference between the British and the Australian pound, said the priest, "we dare not stabilize the American dollar with the British pound." If this were done, he said, "we can hang for sale signs on American farms and give them to the Australian farmers."

Idle Set at 6,000,000.

"Any serious talk of stabilizing the American dollar with the British pound, as it is now," he said, "is just this side of criminal."

Father Coughlin praised both the NRA and the Civil Works Administration, but warned against any belief that the CWA effected a permanent solution of unemployment. "Counting the 4,000,000 men afforded work by the CWA," he said, "the country's unemployed now total 10,000,000."

The priest asserted that "the manufacturer's purpose is to emasculate the NRA," adding, "and he has been doing a pretty good job of it."

Injury to Dignity Proves Worth $213

Argentinan Wins Verdict in Paris Court.

Paris, Feb. 4 (AP).—Luiz Bertrand, once secretary to the former Argentine Ambassador, the Marquis Alvarez de Toledo, today won a verdict of 3,345 francs (approximately $213) in his "injured dignity" suit against Gen. Pertine, president of the Argentine commission for foreign purchases.

Bertrand was appointed chief clerk to the purchasing commission when the Ambassador retired in 1930.

One day the general told him to put on a linen office coat. This was too much for Bertrand, who refused to don the coat, and the general discharged him for insubordination.

Peru Is Gratified By Bond Response

Believe Debt Payment Was Aid in Wall Street.

Lima, Peru, Feb. 4 (AP).—Banking and financial circles commented favorably today on the reaction to Peruvian bonds in Wall street, believing it to be the result of payment of Peru's fiscal obligations and the regularization of service on internal loans.

President Benavides' statement at the time of Secretary of State Cordell Hull's visit to Lima also was believed to have influenced the market.

Some circles were of the opinion that devaluation of the dollar would facilitate the settlement of Peruvian loans.

Lynching Suspect Is Freed by Jury

Trials of Six Others in Missouri Held Up.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 4 (AP).—Walter Garton, 41, a cook, is free today on a charge of first degree murder in the lynching of a colored man here November 28, and the trials of six others were in abeyance pending a decision from Attorney General Roy McKittrick as to what further action will be taken.

Garton was acquitted by a Buchanan County Circuit Court jury last night on the first ballot. He was charged with being a leader of a mob that lynched and burned Lloyd Warner, 19, who was accused of criminally attacking a young white woman.

Samuel Utz, a juror, informed police that a group of persons threw eggs at his home after the verdict was announced, but officers said no other untoward incident was reported.

Dillinger Gang Member Object Of Police Hunt

Fear of New Plot to Deliver Leader Starts Search in 50-Mile Area.

Chicago, Feb. 4 (AP).—A report that John Hamilton, member of the Dillinger gang still at large, had been seen near Crown Point caused a general alarm to be sent out to all police within 50 miles today.

The possibility that an attempt to rescue John Dillinger might be made by survivors of his gang led to the placing of heavy police details on all main highways in search of the Hamilton car.

Police repeatedly have emphasized the danger of a rescue effort for Dillinger, who was lodged in jail at Crown Point Tuesday, following his capture in Tuscon, Ariz. He faces a charge of murder during a bank robbery.

Fugitive Shot in Raid.

Hamilton was wounded in the same robbery for which Dillinger is held, that of the First National Bank of East Chicago. Three other members of the gang, also caught in Tuscon, are to be turned over to Lima, Ohio, police to face a charge of murdering Sheriff Jess Sarber in rescuing Dillinger from jail there last October.

The Hamilton alarm was raised by Patrolmen Ted Milakovich and George Menthetes, of Gary, who said they had chased a car containing a man they identified as Hamilton along the Lincoln highway from a point seven miles south of Gary into Dyer, Ind. The car bore an Ohio license and carried another man and a woman.

4 Shots Fired at Policeman.

Police were also inclined to suspect that a mysterious attack on Patrolman Claude Walker, of the Indiana State Police, at the Tremont Barracks might be connected with Hamilton's activities.

Walker said that some one crept up to the window of the barracks, where he was alone, and fired four shots at him. One shot went through his coat lapel, Walker said. Another broke a typewriter and two others entered a wall.

Dillinger is to be arraigned tomorrow.

Conrad is jointly charged with Judson Pryor, of Hagerstown. Conrad has denied the charge.

Fess Puts Job Relief Up to Administration

Atlantic City, N. J., Feb. 4 (U.P.).—The chief concern of the United States should be to "inaugurate a policy that will relieve the burdens of the Treasury by absorbing unemployment," Senator Simeon D. Fess, of Ohio, said in an address here.

There is nothing in the Roosevelt program which looks to permanent business and industrial recovery, Fess said. Rather the Administration's policies must be viewed as relief measures.

Virginia Opens Insane Asylum Quiz Tonight

Assemblymen Will Probe Charges of "Intolerable Conditions."

Richmond, Feb. 4 (AP).—Conditions in Virginia's hospitals for the insane and the epileptic colony near Lynchburg will be studied at a public hearing tomorrow night before a special legislative committee.

The resolution for the investigation was presented by Senator Gilliam, of Petersburg, following charges by the executive council of the Medical Society of Virginia of "intolerable conditions" due to overcrowding and shortage of attendants.

Representatives of the medical society have been invited to the hearing to substantiate the charges. Four of the five superintendents of the institution also are expected.

The committee is composed of Senator Gilliam, chairman, and Senators Miller and Battle, and Delegates Witten, Boschen, Hodges and Moore.

It has been estimated that the cost of installing automatic sprinkling systems in four of the institutions would be approximately $175,000. The Central State Hospital at Petersburg, for the Negro insane, already is thus equipped.

Budget Director Bradford has prepared figures showing appropriations for these hospitals under the last four governors.

Under the two budgets presented by Gov. Davis, 1920-24, the total outlay was $341,575; under Gov. Trinkle, $189,633; under Gov. Byrd, $1,334,990, and under Gov. Pollard, including the budget now under consideration, $437,505.

Tax Man Sues Six In "Big Shot" Trial

Failed to Pay Levies on Whisky, Is U. S. Charge.

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—Tax liens were filed in the United States District Court here yesterday by N. B. Early, collector of internal revenue for Virginia, against six men who were defendants in Norfolk's famous "big shot" prohibition conspiracy case here last spring.

The liens allege the men failed to pay revenue taxes on whisky. Three were acquitted and three convicted in the conspiracy trial.

The heaviest assessment asked is against George Rohanna, former prizefighter, who was acquitted in the conspiracy case. The tax lien claims $1,155 in unpaid taxes. In each of the six cases the "nature of tax" was given as "prohibition-narcotic."

Failures to Oust 40 Midshipmen

All Seniors Pass Test But 25 "Plebes" Must Quit.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—Scholarship deficiencies during the first term, just ended, will cause the resignation of 40 midshipmen, officials of the Naval Academy announced today.

Members of the first, or senior class, made the required grades, but there is one delinquent in the second class, 14 in the third, and 25 in the fourth or "plebe," whose members were admitted last summer.

There are approximately 1,700 midshipmen, and the percentage of failures is somewhat smaller than usual, particularly in the fourth class.

Bride Obtains Divorce After Hectic Romance and Marriage

Winchester, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—A new chapter in a wierd "romance" was written in Frederick County Circuit Court here when Mrs. Ethel Deats Reinert Elms was granted a partial divorce from Frank A. Elms, of Cross Junction, near here.

The Elms first came into the news last April 13, when he allegedly forced his then "bride-elect" to accompany him to Hagerstown, Md., for the marriage ceremony. In the Hagerstown marriage license bureau, Mrs. Reinert appealed to a policeman to protect her against Elms, whom, she said, had forced her to accompany him at the point of a gun.

Elms was arrested. Officers found a rifle in his car. Elms denied he had forced Mrs. Reinert to accompany him, adding that he had but $3 to buy the license and that he hoped to pawn the gun with a minister for performing the rites.

Mrs. Reinert told local officers the same story when Elms was returned here for trial. Four days later, however, she refused to press charges against Elms and he was released. Mrs. Reinert married him here April 17.

A few weeks after their marriage, Mrs. Elms declared in her divorce bill Elms mistreated her. Once he attempted to cut her feet with a mowing scythe, she alleged. Again, she declared, he choked her into unconsciousness and held her head over a rain barrel until she regained consciousness.

Although Mrs. Elms declared that Elms threatened to burn her home if she sought outside aid, she left him early in July and went to the home of her mother at Pocono, Pa., where she has since lived.

Two Virginia University Men Named for Linguistic Study

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—Two members of the University of Virginia's school of English, Prof. Archibald A. Hill and Nathan M. Caffee, of Norfolk, Va., graduate student, have been granted fellowships by the general education board to study methods of linguistic research at Brown University in preparation for the extension into the South of the work of the Linguistic Atlas.

The Linguistic Atlas has the backing of the American Council of Learned Societies and is financed by the Rockefeller Foundation. It is a study of vocabulary and pronunciation of American dialects, especially those of the older sections, the Atlantic seaboard and parts of the Middle West.

Phonetic study is done by field workers with questionnaires, the answers to which are recorded phonetically.

The Linguistic Atlas recently finished its study of New England dialects and some of its findings have been published in American Speech, edited by Prof. William Cabell Greet and issued by the Columbia University Press.

Preparations are being made to extend its work into the South and several linguistic scholars from Southern States have been chosen for this work.

Dr. Hill will spend from June to September as one of the staff of workers under Prof. Hans Kurath, of Brown University, head of the Linguistic Atlas. Mr. Caffee will be on the staff during the college year 1934-35.

Poultry Code Will Be Topic At Hagerstown

Farm Agent Says AAA Aim Is to Control Production in Chick Industry.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—Poultrymen and hatcherymen from Frederick, Allegany, Garret and Washington Counties will meet at the courthouse here Wednesday to discuss the commercial and breeder hatchery code. This is one of the leading industries among farmers in the four western Maryland counties.

It is the plan of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to control and adjust poultry and egg production through the code, Milton D. Moore, county farm agent of Washington County, stated.

The code applies to all individuals selling 500 or more chicks, turkey poults, or ducklings a year, or who do any custom hatching.

The code also prohibits the setting of eggs to produce chicks for sale that weigh less than an average of 23 ounces per dozen.

Premiums paid to farmers over market egg prices by hatcheries are to be determined by county and local committees, subject to approval of the code manager or coordinating committee.

Giving extra chicks beyond the number specified in the order is prohibited under the code, as well as misleading advertising, and literature or catalogues already printed that violate the code must not be distributed.

List prices of all chickens, &c., must be filed with the National coordinating committee and all such prices must not be less than cost of production. All labor, operators, family or hired, must be figured at a minimum or 37½ cents an hour for time employed in the hatchery or any work relating thereto, including any work with hatchery flocks.

Sale of Home As Loan Pends In Court Test

Action at Bristol Seeks to Have Foreclosure Set Aside.

Bristol, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—Walter Anderson, colored, of Bristol, is the central figure in a mortgage foreclosure test case soon to be brought up in court here, which has aroused much interest in this area.

The issue is whether a foreclosure sale on property on which a loan from the Home Owners Loan Corporation is pending can be set aside.

"So far as I know, this is the first case of its kind in the country," said R. L. Pennington, attorney for Anderson, yesterday. The case is to be presented before Judge Floyd H. Roberts, of local corporation court, within a week, he said.

Anderson, carpenter and man of all work, owned a $3,500 house here on which a loan of $500 was outstanding. Unable to pay, Anderson applied for a Home Owners Loan Corporation loan.

While the application was in Washington for final approval, a foreclosure sale was held. The following day word was received from Washington that the loan had been approved.

Litter Reveals Glad, Sad News

Norfolk Police Locate Dad for Girl; Brother Dead.

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—A letter from Miss Mary Hammer, of North Hollywood, Daytona Beach, Fla., seeking information of her father and brother, whom she has not seen since 1926, was received yesterday at the office of Chief of Police Sidney W. Ironmonger, and was turned over to Sergt. J. C. Benton, of the detective bureau, for investigation.

Today a letter is on its way to Miss Hammer with both glad and sad news. It is from the young woman's father, John Hammer, of this city, located by Benton a few minutes after he received Miss Hammer's letter, but it carries the information that the brother, Earl, is dead.

Earl died in New Jersey at the age of 18. Mr. Hammer, employed at the Norfolk Navy Yard, was overjoyed to hear from his daughter. He said he had for three years been endeavoring to locate her.

Coast Guard Work Sought in Norfolk

Business Men Want Air Carriers Built There.

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—Norfolk and Portsmouth commercial organizations have combined in efforts to have some of the seven airplane carriers for the Coast Guard, constructed at the Norfolk Navy Yard.

In communications yesterday to Senator Byrd and Congressman Darden, they called attention to contracts being awarded two northern yards, and inquired as to the possibility of obtaining contracts on vessels not included in the announcement. Original plans called for construction of nine such vessels and $15,500,000 in public works funds was allocated.

It was pointed out that construction of two airplane carriers would mean disbursement of $3,214,100.

13 Danville Police Take Radio Tests

New Call System Will Be Inaugurated Soon.

Danville, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.). Thirteen Danville policemen went to Winston-Salem, N. C., yesterday to be examined for certificates qualifying them to "go on the air."

Danville's new radio police call system will be operated next week when the Federal Radio Commission has allocated four ultra-short wave channels for the system.

Chief of Police Martin picked 13 men to qualify as announcers. The 72-foot vertical antenna was raised on the roof of the City Hall yesterday.

Mistake in Sentence Report Is Corrected

Richmond, Feb. 4 (AP).—An Associated Press account of the trial of William B. Taylor before Federal Judge Luther B. Way, Friday, erroneously said that Taylor had received a suspended sentence of five years on a plea of guilty to a charge of attempted extortion.

No sentence was imposed, the court saying that imposition of sentence was suspended for a period of five years. Under the Court's judgment Taylor, in the event he again should fall into trouble, can be brought into court and sentenced to any term not greater than 20 years and fined not more than $5,000, either or both. The Associated Press is glad to correct this error.

Historic Room in Williamsburg Tavern Open to First Lady

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, viewed the beautiful Apollo room (shown above) in the Raleigh Tavern at Williamsburg, Va., during their visit there Friday and Saturday. For the First Lady the room had especial significance, for it was here in 1776 that the first chapter of Phi Beta Kappa fraternity—of which the President is a member—was founded by students and faculty of the College of William and Mary—in actual physical existence the oldest college in the United States. The Apollo room is the most historic of the public rooms in the Tavern and recently was restored as part of the restoration of Colonial Williamsburg sponsored by John D. Rockefeller, jr. Patriots of the Colony gathered in this room when royal governors dissolved the House of Burgesses in 1769 and 1774, according to tradition. Dances and receptions were held here. George Washington dined in the Tavern and Thomas Jefferson danced with fair Belinda in the Apollo room.

Woodstock Unable To Get CWA Art

Chamber Seeks Painting of Revolution Hero.

Woodstock, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—Efforts of the Woodstock Chamber of Commerce to obtain a painting of the Rev. Peter Muhlenburg, local Revolutionary hero, through the Civil Works Administration artists' relief organization, has been futile, a meeting of the organization here was told.

The Chamber sought the painting to hang in Shenandoah County Court House here, the site of the old Lutheran Church where, in 1775, Muhlenburg preached his famous sermon which stirred to arms the citizenry of Shenandoah County against England.

Legend of the Shenandoah Valley recites that after Muhlenburg preached his sermon from the text "There is a time for war and a time for peace," he threw off his clerical robe and beneath it was the uniform of a Continental colonel. He led volunteers from this section during the Revolutionary War.

Virginia Liquor Job Prospects Stir Hot Race

Dispensary System Is Satisfactory to All "Pie" Seekers.

By J. K. Irving, jr.

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 4—The present solid position of the Virginia alcoholic control bill passed by the House of Delegates by a vote of 84 to 1 with prospects of the Senate following suit in almost the same proportion—has cast the Old Dominion job-hunter into covert on a hot trail.

Little is heard now among the politicians, large or small, about the relative merits of the dispensary system and some other method of handling liquor. They are all for the commission's recommendation, which is now practically the General Assembly's decision. There will be big jobs (if you call the $3,000 a year salary of the three commissioners big), medium-sized jobs and little jobs. They will all pay relatively good salaries and, in spite of what may be said to the contrary, they come under the general head of patronage. That accounts for the bustle which has already begun. It also accounts, in large measure, for the failure of opposition to the dispensary system to materialize.

Salary Cut Opposed.

In the higher brackets the failure of the General Assembly to approve the commission's recommendation that the three principal control officers be paid $7,500 per annum was a source of disappointment. A number of repeal leaders, including former State Senator C. O'Connor Goolrick, a member of the commission, deplore the cut to $5,000 on the ground that men of the necessary ability can not be had at the revised price. They say there is danger of poor administration on that account.

There isn't very much to that argument as most of the observing citizenry knows. Some of the very ablest and most dependable business men in Virginia would be eager to accept one of these key jobs. The main question is will the appointments, in any event, be made on that basis? Probably not. Business ability, although it is the most essential quality for success of the plan, does not always hit up with political "drag." The hopeful list of smaller fry is really not sorrowful over the reduction; it should leave a larger "cut" for the rank and file.

Just what the State alcoholic control set-up will mean to the unemployed cannot be determined at this time, of course. There is little doubt, however, that it will turn out many a job even if it does not relieve a great number of the actually jobless. The scheme provides that cities, towns and counties after six months from passage of the bill, may vote themselves out of the liquor plan and the board may not establish stores in these localities.

Big Pay Roll Boost.

Taking into consideration "hard times" and other exigencies of the general situation, it seems highly probable that most of the 100 counties of the State will try the experiment of one or more "stores." That gives you some idea of the number which may be added to the commonwealth's pay roll. Exclusive of the triumvirate, there will be division directors, superintendents, inspectors or whatever they may be called; then local managers or storekeepers with the necessary quota of clerks or assistants. Surely salaries will meet every requirement of the NRA.

Thus, for the moment, the CWA, the PWA and the other monograms fade into insignificance so far as the aspiring Virginian is concerned; he looks to the State for his accelerated nourishment; insofar as he is strong with the powers he will get it. An amusing, if not strange, feature of the situation is that the handler of the liquid demon is to become a person of prestige. He will not bear the old-time brand of Cain which was pressed upon the brow of the bartender.

Fight on Film Censor Board Will Resume

Roanoke Delegate Seeks Transfer of Fund to Women's Home.

By Doug Warrenfels.

Richmond, Feb. 4.—Renewal of attempts to abolish the State motion picture censor board was in prospect here tonight.

Delegate Walter H. Scott, Roanoke, announced he would seek to have the $22,000 annual appropriation for the board transferred to the Home for Confederate Women, Richmond, when the 1934 budget bill reached the General Assembly.

The institution, Scott said, has been forced to reject many applications for aid from eligible women because of limited finances.

"With the money now going to the movie board," Scott declared, "the home could expand. I'm told they could take care of about 40 additional women with $22,000.

Theaters Would Pay.

"It would be much more sensible for the State to spend this money on needy Confederate women than to throw it away on movie censorship. A National board reviews all new pictures. There is not any point in operating a State board, especially in these times."

Reminded by colleagues that theaters paid the upkeep of the censor board, Scott said his amendment would be drafted so as to continue that income.

The House last week rejected by 63 to 25 a motion by Delegate Y. M. Hodges, Southhill, to discharge the moral and social welfare committee from consideration of his bill to abolish the censor board. The committee previously refused to report the measure favorably.

Followed Dismissal.

The Hodges proposal apparently resulted from the recent action of Attorney General John Saunders in arbitrarily removing Mrs. Emma Speed Sampson, Richmond, from the board.

Debate on the Administration-sponsored State dispensary liquor control plan approved by the House, will begin in the Senate this week. More than a score of amendments probably will be considered.

One of the most controversial issues will be raised by Senator Aubrey Weaver, Front Royal, when he offers an amendment intended to permit sale of hard liquors in hotels and restaurants. A similar proposal was killed in the House.

Danville, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.). Sircy Edmunds, 16, colored, is in charge of the juvenile court authorities as a result of the shooting of Percy Martin, 23, also colored. Martin is in a hospital with a bullet wound below the heart and in serious condition.

Radio Waves and Ripples

PROBABLY no broadcaster ever went on the air under greater hardship than did the Byrd expedition in the first program from the Antarctic Saturday night.

With tons of precious stores to be moved to safety away from the crumbling ice edge that was the Jacob Ruppert's dock, there was little time and energy to devote to setting up the first broadcasting station on the Antarctic for operation under anything like normal conditions.

Using only the most necessary equipment, hastily installed, KFZ puts its first program on the air from a tent.

In a radiogram to Herbert L. Pettey, secretary of the Federal Radio Commission, Charles J. V. Murphy, director of radio communication in Little America, outlined some of the difficulties encountered.

"Probably no broadcasting station in the world has been founded under more spectacular circumstances than KFZ," the message read. "Immediately after last Saturday's broadcast, Station KJTY aboard the Ruppert, after voyaging 15,000 miles, was dismantled. Preparations were made to move into Little America directly.

"The breaking up of the ice front near the Jacob Ruppert's berth forced the ship to move and it was Monday before the equipment could be landed. The heavy transmitter was swung in a large cargo sling from the boat deck to a dog team sledge waiting on the ice, and was instantly hauled away from the crumbling egde of ice. John Dyer accompanied the sledge through the pressure ridges and crevasses west of Little America. It toppled over once, but was unharmed. The balance of the equipment was flown to Little America by Bill Bowlin.

"The last load was carried through a snow flurry, it having been impossible to transport lumber into Little America owing to the urgency of unloading winter stores from the Ruppert and all tents were being used. It was necessary to have a tent made.

"Kennedy turned the tent out in nine hours. Tonight the Kohler was still stalled on the unfinished bridge across a crevasse 3 miles west of Little America. The construction of the bridge is under way and the Kohler will be moved into Little America by dog teams. Unfortunately the 12 telephone poles intended for directional antennas are now serving the double duty of ship's shores and longitudinal members of the bridges across the crevasses. It will be necessary to use the antenna of the last expedition for the time being."

Al Jolson's through with the movies.

At least, that's what he told the newspaper boys when he arrived in New York to resume broadcasting for N. B. C. on the Paul Whiteman program Thursday.

The mammy singer explained that he preferred the informality of the microphone which permitted him to enter his listeners' homes and entertain them at their firesides, to the indirect approach of the cinema.

Now Aunt Sadie probably will start going to the movies again. You couldn't get her near one after Cousin John took her to see "Sonny Boy" without giving her an idea of what it would be like.

It's about time our radio stations installed emergency landing fields as a means of protecting their equipment from lost amateur pilots if what we hear about a direction finder developed by the Bureau of Standards is true.

The bureau, after considerable expenditure of time and money has developed a gadget which will enable air pilots to tune in any broadcasting station and steer a straight course for it. This means that 592 commercial radio stations in 450 American cities are now "true" compasses for wandering airmen. It seems that there has been a need for this sort of thing for some time in view of the fact that the magnetic compass isn't the reliable instrument most of us have believed it to be, but rather has a marked tendency to deviate with changing geography and seasons. Radio stations, on the other hand, stay put. You know where to find them whether you want them or not.

One of the nicest features of the direction finder to our way of thinking is that it will tell the pilot where to go without making him listen to the program.

Some time ago this department carried an item to the effect that Judge Rutherford had been denied the air by local network broadcasters because he had one or two bones to pick with certain religious denominations. We have since been given to understand that far from being a sectarian, Judge Rutherford is a stanch advocate of interdenominational worship. Probably we should have listened to the Watchtower broadcasts on WOL each Sunday.

Edward P. Kimball, organist and director of missionary work for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Washington, is one of Columbia's Church of the Air broadcasters Sunday. "What Do I Gain?" is the subject of his talk.

Mr. Kimball formerly was organist at the Salt Lake City Tabernacle and is the father of Edward Kimball, jr., WRC-WMAL announcer.

No crooner is John J. Connelly (above), though he can sing. He won last month's audition contest conducted in connection with Joe Brown's Opportunity Night on WOL. For some esoteric reason or other John wants to be a newspaperman. He has a job in the editorial department of The Washington Post.

Bristol, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—Elsewhere there may be some "playing politics with human misery," but CWA workmen rolls in Bristol, Va., show a clean record.

A check on the 610 men eligible for the pay roll show only two are qualified voters—one a Democrat and one a Republican. Only 42 have ever voted, according to poll tax records.

"The New Dealers"

Harry Hopkins.

"He has offended a lot of the politicians and the Tory group is out for his scalp. He is as close to The White House as any of them, for he is one of 'F. D. R.'s Men.'"

. . . from Chapter 6, "Utopia on Tap," in THE NEW DEALERS, beginning in The Washington Post, Sunday, February 11, and continuing for 31 consecutive installments, daily and Sunday, through Tuesday, March 13.

Note: The author of "The New Dealers" prefers to remain "unknown." But, although his work is not to be regarded as reflecting the editorial opinion of The Washington Post, we have no hesitancy in asserting that no more vividly interesting or entertainingly presented material has yet been written concerning the leading men and women back of The New Deal.

Winchester Hunt Leads to Florida

Man Is Accused of Duping Business Houses.

Winchester, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.). The hunt for George R. Shepherd, alias E. H. Stanley, who is alleged to have duped Winchester business interests into believing he represented a hardware company, led to Florida today.

Chief of Police C. W. Hollis and Andrew Bell, secretary of the chamber of commerce here, stated they learned that Stanley had cashed a check in Daytona Beach on a Cumberland bank. Police wired Daytona Beach and Miami police to be on lookout for Stanley and, if apprehended, hold him on felony warrant from Winchester.

Shepherd came to Winchester the week before Christmas and is charged with posing as head of a hardware concern, bargaining with a local bank for the purchase of 22 acres of land here as a factory site and then cashing a forged check for $420.

A Dog Poem.

Last year a pamphlet appeared containing the biography of William Croswell Doane, the first Bishop of Albany. His cathedral is visible from the train, and I often think of him as I look upon it. He was born in 1832 and died in 1913. For some time he was rector of St. John's Church in Hartford, Conn., and after he became bishop was one of the most influential churchmen in America; he was often affectionately called "William of Albany."

This biography is written by the Rev. Dr. George Lynde Richardson and is copiously illustrated. It gives an excellent account of Bishop Doane's work and religious beliefs. But as there are many interesting persons who love a dog more than a dogma, it is interesting to remember not only that Bishop Doane had a dog but wrote the following charming poem about him, which at that time had a wide circulation. The animal was a huge St. Bernard, named Cluny.

Cluny.

I am quite sure he thinks that I am God—
Since He is God on whom each one depends
For life, and all things that His bounty sends—
Not quick to mind, but quicker far than I
To Him whom God I know and own: his eye,
Deep brown and liquid, watches
for my nod;
He is more patient underneath the rod
Than I, when God his wise corrections sends.
He looks love at me, deep as words e'er spake;
And from me never crumb or sup will take
But he wags thanks with his most vocal tail;
And when some crashing noise
wakes all his fear
His is content and quiet if I'm near,
Secure that my protection will prevail;
So, faithful, mindful, thankful, trustful, he Tells me what I unto my God should be.

ROBERT FERDINAND WAGNER, Senator from New York. Chairman, National Labor Board. Ardent sponsor of the New Deal's social reforms, unemployment relief and insurance, &c. Arrived in the United States a German immigrant boy of 8, in 1885. Son of an East Side janitor, his rise by hard work is another American epic which he is proud to relate. He, Al Smith and Jimmy Walker were once Three Musketeers of late Tammany Boss Murphy. In New York's Assembly from 1905-1918, Lieutenant Governor in 1914, a respected judge of the State Supreme Court until elected to the Senate in 1927. One of the Senate's ablest, most admired members—and one of the few senators who, by reason of foreign birth, can not aspire to the White House.

Uncle Sam, the Pied Piper

Not Peter Piper, but Rat Catchers Picked a Peck of Trouble; Baltimore Ratters Irked, Humanitarians Up in Arms.

Baltimore, Feb. 4 (U.P.).—Armed with 50,000 traps, approximately 300 CWA employes recently went forth among Baltimore's byways and highways to capture rats. The Government wanted to study the diseases they carried and count the fleas on their backs.

Baltimoreans nodded with approval for there was news that "for every Baltimorean there is a rat."

Into concerted action swung the campaign and rats were slaughtered by the thousands. Citizens read of the rat campaign as avidly as of impending political campaigns.

Then discord reared its head. Professional ratters came forward to say the Government was competing with legitimate industry; humanitarians began an investigation of methods of slaughter.

And now the war to end rats has become the center of controversy.

Why; It's Inhumane!

First, it was the humanitarians. They heard that some rats were being allowed to suffer—being piled helter-skelter upon trucks before merciful death ended the misery of injuries sustained in the traps.

To the defense came CWA leaders, who pointed out that methods of extermination were as kindly as possible. Only the finest traps were used, they explained, and indeed, the rat that escaped alive was a most unusual rat.

But no sooner was that question settled when letters went to Washington from the Baltimore Association of Exterminators raising outcry against the Government paying men to do what they made a living doing—namely, catching rats.

The association also pooh-poohed the idea of amateurs being good ratters. Succinctly they pointed out that rats "are extremely intelligent" and the skill and knowledge of experts was required actually to put them on the run.

There's Another Reason.

To put such cagey rodents on the spot, spokesmen explained, one needed to "outsmart" them. This, through craftily feeding them poison.

But loudest was the complaint that the Government was offering competition to legitimate industry. Of course, said spokesmen, there was no objection to counting fleas on the rodents and finding out about diseases they carried, but there was objection as to where the rats were caught. The association didn't want CWA workers catching rats in inhabited buildings.

That was the way members of the association made a living, they said—catching rats in inhabited buildings.

Miner's Wife Held For Shooting Mate

Virginian Felled by Bullet in Home of Neighbor.

Lebanon, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—Mrs. Elbert Dye is in Russell County jail here charged with shooting her husband. Dye was shot through the window of a neighbor's home at Sword's Creek Coal Co. mining camp.

Dye, critically wounded, is in a Richlands hospital.

It is alleged that Dye left home after telling his wife he intended to attend a mine union meeting; that Mrs. Dye learned that a meeting was not to be held and began a search, finding him at a neighbor's home.

Covington Campaigns For Liquor Tax Share

Covington, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.). Town officials, the Chamber of Commerce and interested business men here have made a strong plea to State Senator George W. Layman to do everything in his power to defeat the provision of the liquor sales bill which prevents cities, towns and counties from participating in the revenue derived from liquor sales.

The Chamber of Commerce, with the support of individual merchants here, has also sent protests to Senator Layman and to Delegate T. J. Wilson, jr., against any increase in State taxes by the legislature. The protest is directed particularly against any form of merchants' sales tax.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

Taking Back the Old Home.

(Being a letter to his real estate agent from the owner of a brownstone front leased for the last 12 years to a speakeasy proprietor.)

Dear George: I have been down to No. 367 to look it over, and I am more perplexed than ever over what to do with the building. I had thought of moving back in and using it as my residence again, but I am afraid that through the nights I should hear the rattle of glasses, the banging of iron doors and the persistent "We were in here before. We're all right," rising in a million whispers.

* * * *

The place seemed full of ghosts; full, in fact, of very full ghosts, and as I rambled through the old house I fancied I could hear the skulls of unwelcomed and boisterous patrons bounding down the stairways with the heavy tread of the bouncer close behind.

* * * *

The first floor has been transformed into a curious combination of anterooms and cubbyholes, and the big living room upstairs where I spent so many happy years has all the earmarks of a hastily abandoned saloon. It seems to to me the last tenant might at least have taken the bar and mirrors with him. The lovely arched windows in this and all other rooms on that floor had been bricked in or boarded. It was quite ghastly.

* * * *

I couldn't find the ancestral dining room at all. What the bootlegger did with it is still a mystery. He probably cut it three to one, or something. Upstairs where my children were raised the scene is truly pathetic. All the walls between the bedrooms are gone and the place is strewn with broken bottles, restaurant chairs, menu cards, cigarette butts, torn lamp shades, &c.

* * * *

I tried to inspect the attic and cellar, but they were so full of kegs, jugs, cases, demijohns, &c., that I could not get in. Over in a corner of the cellar I thought I saw five or six bodies, which I thought quite likely, but did not investigate further.

* * * *

Well, I suppose it serves me right, although, as you will remember, I was not supposed to have any knowledge of the real purpose of the tenant renting the building. That was part of our agreement, and as nothing ever got into the newspapers I guess my secret is fairly safe. Do what you think best about the property. Personally, I think it is salable now only as a rare old ruin.

Yours truly,

* * * *

P. S.—Go over and look in the cellar. Maybe those bodies are really there. If so, it is your property, and I never owned it.

"—SELLING CALLS FOR HEALTHY NERVES, TOO—MR. MARKSMAN"

Kenneth B. Logan, Salesman, of Scarsdale, N. Y., says:

"The selling game calls for healthy nerves just as much as being a wonderful marksman. Meeting people all day long...trying to turn prospects into customers... the life of a salesman certainly tells on the nerves! I smoke most of the time—but I smoke only Camels, and I'll tell you why I say only Camels! Camels don't upset my nerves—and no cigarette can match Camels on flavor, either."

Virgil Richard, Champion Sharpshooter, says:

"I've been smoking for years and had no trouble in keeping my nerves in shape for making record scores. That's because I have long been a Camel smoker. Camels are much milder, and never interfere with my nerves."

How Are YOUR Nerves?

Does your job sometimes get you down? Do you feel tired? Ready to "blow up" any minute...because of raw nerves?

Try to get enough sleep. Eat sensibly. And get a fresh slant on your smoking by turning to Camels. Much has been said on the subject of tobacco quality. But——

Camels are made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS than any other popular brand.

That statement is conclusive. And it represents an important benefit that nervous people should not overlook!

Begin to smoke Camels. Taste those finer tobaccos. Notice their mildness. You will be delighted to find that Camels do not upset your nerves...or tire your taste.

"Shipwreck," The Pioneer.

Alvin (Shipwreck) Kelly has always been something of a pioneer. For years he has been going about the country—aye, even the world—finding the best flagpoles and sitting on them, and, in the spirit of Noah, ignoring foolish questions of people who wanted to know what good he was doing the world thereby.

Given a fair day, a fairly sturdy flagpole and an appreciative audience, Shipwreck has always been ready to practice his art like a true genius engrossed in it. Given a cold day, with ice-encrusted poles, he does not sit down and brood like Alexander the Great; he hatches either statistics or ideas. One day he brought forth from his meditations with a pencil the announcement that he had actually spent 13,000 hours shinnying up or sitting on flagstaffs.

The frigid weather we have been having lately has not chilled Shipwreck's pioneering ardor, apparently. He has been reading that one of the great problems confronting those who are trying to stabilize the labor market is to provide seasonal employment. People who make valentines and Easter cards, for instance, have a lot of spare time on their hands; the idea is to turn them to making baggage labels. Or, for further instance, people who operate farm relief schemes might be diverted to repairing cuckoo clocks in winter months.

But, while social workers argue, Shipwreck does things, like the man of action that he is. He showed up Saturday night at the Roseland, that rococo dance hall on Broadway, where for a dime a lady or a gentleman (no questions asked) may rent a partner and have a fling at terpsichore. Diked out in a fashion to make the Illinois Congressman who didn't have a tailcoat green with envy, Shipwreck sat coyly, not on a flagpole, but on a red-plush divan and waited for a girl with a dime and an urge to dance, to tap him.

Provided the pedal extremities that have caressed many a pole can be taught to keep off maidenly insteps, Shipwreck has at least solved his own personal problem of seasonal employment.

The CWA Strike.

Today New York City will witness a strike of employes of the CWA in protest against recent lay-offs and pay cuts. Work is to be suspended for 15 minutes and at that time telegrams will be dispatched to President Roosevelt demanding continuance of relief work after May 1, a minumum wage of $5 per day for four days per week for skilled labor, and enactment of a measure providing for unemployment insurance.

An outright dole at least has the virtue of showing its true character. The self-respecting recipient of such charity is eager to be divorced from dependence upon it, while the disbursing Government harbors no illusions that its outlays are made in payment for valuable services performed. Unfortunately the CWA program is based upon a fictitious assumption that recipients of relief are engaged upon useful work that should be remunerated at going or better than going rates of pay in private employment. The result is that the CWA comes to be regarded as a bona fide employer of labor, and the beneficiaries of its bounty are encouraged to demand continued employment at rates of pay that bear no relation to the amount or the value of their services.

The dangers of such a camouflaged dole system are patent and the New York strike will serve a useful purpose if it focuses public attention upon them. Apart from the current cost of such misplaced activities, the attitude of the New York strikers shows how quickly made-work systems of this sort fasten themselves upon the body politic and how difficult it is to dislodge them in face of popular opposition.

Hazards Of Coasting.

Coasting accidents seem unusually tragic because they are so unnecessary. When sledding and coasting are carried on under proper safeguards they are not very dangerous. But when children use their sleds on streets which have not been especially designated and prepared for coasting the hazards are numerous.

Automobiles and sleds can not use the same street with safety, regardless of how cautious the drivers may be. Accident reports during the last few days indicate that parked cars are almost as dangerous as vehicles in motion. When sleds beyond the control of their riders plunge under standing automobiles at a high speed fractured skulls, broken legs or other severe injuries are almost an inevitable result.

Coasting in Washington appears to be unusually hazardous because children do not have frequent opportunities to use their sleds. Their meager experience together with their enthusiasm for this novel sport tends to make them easy victims. When these factors are combined with youth's customary unawareness of danger the need for precaution is apparent.

Many hazards can be removed by designating appropriate streets for coasting and clearing them of dangerous obstructions. To some extent this practice is followed here, but it might be much more widely adopted in periods, like the present, when snow remains on the streets for several days. Full cooperation of parents would be necessary to prevent coasting in dangerous places, but more stringent rules against the towing of sleds behind automobiles on public streets and against coasting where danger is particularly acute might well be considered.

Time To Act.

The general strike of utilities employes and street rioting over the week-end in Cuba emphasize the necessity for speedy action on the part of the American Government to provide substantial economic relief for the people of the island if we desire them to have stable government.

Not even Col. Mendieta, whose regime we recognized with alacrity and apparent pleasure when Cuban leaders tired of kaleidoscopic revolutionary changes and offered him for approval, has long been able to conceal the serious challenge to his ability to survive which is embodied in the demonstrations now under way.

Basically, nothing has been changed by the Mendieta government, because, after all, the situation can not be changed without our initiative. We recognized Mendieta, but recognition is not enough. We agreed to ship in $10,000,000 worth of foodstuffs to help feed starving Cubans, but that is frankly a palliative—at best a relief measure that does not strike at the root of the trouble. Ventura Dellunde, a Cuban, writing to the editor of the New York Times, says that there is a surplus of every sort of staple foodstuff in Cuba, at prices that are much below ours, and that it is not foodstuffs Cuba needs, but the power to buy them.

It is apparent that there can be no political stability until the Cuban sugar situation is stabilized. Although we promised, impliedly, at least, at the time of recognition, to bring that about, we have made no public move to do so. A conference of administration leaders was held Saturday, it is true, but too many conferences and too little action will produce another Cespedes fiasco. Writing in the Baltimore Sun, Prof. Wilfred A. Beardsley, a Cuban authority of Goucher College, warns that "mere recognition by the United States does not constitute stability. We must hasten with more than recognition." Dr. Beardsley says that cutting the sugar tariff in half would solve nine-tenths of Cuba's labor problems, but even 45 or 50 cents a hundred pounds would be a "tremendous lift." He held that it "would probably establish the Mendieta regime." "President Roosevelt has the power," Dr. Beardsley continues, "and if he wants Mendieta to survive, he will exercise it." If he fails to do so, Guiteras and his Leftists "can make a laughing stock out of the United States and the Mendieta government."

Under the reciprocity treaty and the Platt amendment, our duty to help Cuba is indisputably clear. There could be no better time than the immediate present, when the man whom we have approved as the leader most likely to give Cuba orderly government, is valiantly struggling with the problems of economic collapse.

Fate Of The Franc.

Given time, the repatriation of American funds, combined with the activities of speculators trying to realize a profit from the spread between the foreign and domestic buying price of gold, will equalize those two prices through increased dollar offerings against gold. In the interim period, however, the rush to obtain gold for shipment has had the effect of increasing the exchange value of the dollar in terms of the gold franc and thus actually depressing the dollar price of gold in European markets.

This situation can be regarded as temporary, provided, of course, that France remains on the gold standard. Fear that an embargo may be declared upon French gold shipments, however, has resulted in a rush to convert francs into gold for immediate shipment. Not only do possessors of francs desire to obtain gold at once. They also wish to remove that gold from the country without delay, believing that an embargo, if declared, would cover private gold holdings. The result is that gold is being bought at a premium which finds expression in the lower exchange value of the franc. As francs decline in value, moreover, the profit to be made by their purchase and conversion into gold for shipment increases.

As often pointed out, the Bank of France is in possession of an enormous gold reserve and theoretically is capable of resisting a prolonged and heavy gold drain. But well-informed observers have asserted for some time that devaluation and stabilization of the dollar on a substantially undervalued basis would be a grave menace to the franc. The British may meet a depreciated dollar by maneuvering to lower the exchange value of the pound, but to gold standard countries the chief defense lies in declaration of a gold embargo. No matter how great the capacity of a country to sustain gold losses, uneasiness is aroused by a severe drain representing not only a loss of foreign balances but in addition a movement of domestic funds out of the country.

It remains to be seen what action France will take in the currency crisis which confronts her. The forces fighting a second depreciation of the franc are strong, but the conditions now prevailing are so unprecedented that the country may be forced to apply a gold embargo under political, if not economic, pressure. In that case, universal suspension of the gold standard might follow, necessitating a radical modification of our plans for depreciating the dollar. Then we would be charged with responsibility for having forced France and other countries off the gold standard by an arbitrary action taken without consultation with the countries affected.

The Nazi Heaven.

No revolution is complete, it seems, without the overthrow of existing religion, and the creation of a new nationalistic faith. The Nazis of Germany are no more satisfied with traditional form than were the Jacobins in France after the fall of the Bastille or the Bolshevists in Russia after Lenin came into power. Hence, it comes about that zealots in Berlin are at work trying to create a new "German Heaven."

The Nazis are close students of revolution. They know just how one ought to be conducted. Having transformed the state into an oligarchic power completely under the sway of Adolf Hitler, having "purified" German culture by throwing into the fire all literature at variance with Nazism, the followers of Hitler are now devoting themselves to the task of uprooting Christianity in favor of a German-born faith.

Considerable mystery surrounds this new faith. Apparently its sponsors are having some difficulty in formulating satisfactory specifications for the new "German Heaven," although it apparently has been decided that "in the German Heaven our German language will form the tie that binds human soul to human soul." Beyond that, the term "heathenish-Germanic" is used to describe the essence of the new faith. It sounds an excellent and most convincing title.

The Nazis appear to be trying to emulate the Japanese in giving a religious indorsement to political aims. The whole purpose of this new Germanic cult seems to be to magnify the influence of Nordic myths and heritage in the lives of the people. It is part of the propaganda employed by the Nazis to strengthen their hold upon the German people and to cultivate a sense of racial superiority to offset the defeatist psychology forced upon the Reich by the Treaty of Versailles. To the world outside of Germany this effort to secure unification will appear even more crude than the attempt to annihilate all culture that does not bear the stamp of Nazi approval.

Trade With Manchukuo.

It is a safe assumption that every nation is watching carefully its trade with the new state of Manchukuo. Japan is anxious, of course, to publicize every report showing increased commerce between Manchuria and other countries. Henry Pu-Yi, who is about to be crowned emperor, and all his Japanese officials, use every occasion to emphasize their policy of maintaining the "open door" in Manchukuo. Behind this concern over trade with western nations rests a hope that diplomatic recognition of Manchukuo will follow the extension of commercial relations.

Superficial examination of trade statistics has led to the conclusion that trade between the United States and Manchukuo has already shown remarkable improvement. Imports from the United States, it is pointed out, totaled 16,000,000 yen in the first half of 1933, compared with 8,000,000 yen for the whole of 1932. But these figures are misleading. In previous years 50 per cent of Manchuria's imports from this country were shipped by way of Shanghai, and were never credited to Manchuria in trade statistics. Now shipments are made directly to Manchukuo. Depreciation of the yen last year still further minimizes the significance of this gain.

A careful survey of this new state's foreign trade has been made by C. K. Moser, of the Department of Commerce. He draws the conclusion that last year's "imports of American goods, which it is possible will amount to $7,500,000, will be 35 per cent less than those for 1930, an average year, when the correct total value, gained by adding American goods from Shanghai, was approximately $11,600,000." Our 1933 imports to Manchuria undoubtedly exceed those of 1932, but the political conditions prevailing in 1932, says Mr. Moser, "made it very difficult for business, except Japanese, in any form."

Most of Manchukuo's trade goes to Japan. Imports from Japan during the first six months of 1933 were worth about eight times the value of the goods Manchukuo purchased from the United States. Japanese shipments to the new state have more than doubled since 1929 and 1930. Commercial opportunities doubtless have been increased since Japan wrested this territory from China, but it is apparent that virtually all of these advantages have fallen into the lap of Japanese interests.

The Fight for Economy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Allow me to quote from your editorial, "The Fight for Economy"—"Under the present laws all veterans who were injured as a result of their war service are being cared for."

I don't want to insinuate my favorite paper, The Washington Post, would knowingly publish what are not facts, so my natural conclusion, borne out by facts, is there has been so much camouflage used by Veterans' Administration and agitation detrimental to just claims of service connected disabilities of veterans, that, unless your paper makes an investigation, unbiased, of veterans' matters you will continue, either through ignorance of true facts or fears of the Economy League, to print news that is absolutely not true.

Reviews of Spanish War veterans' claims were made at the rate of 1,200 per day. The Board of Appeal functioning since November 27, 1933, had up until January 22 heard four Spanish War claims, with the object of reinstating on pension rolls all service connected disability claims, and 30,000 claims to be heard. At that rate it will be the year of our Lord 721934 when work is completed.

How can all just disabled wartime service claims be taken care of when, not due to just laws, but to lack of enforcement of same, veterans' claims are not examined?

Over 200,000 veterans, so Gen. Hines says, are to be benefited by his new recommendations. Fifty thousand of those veterans are accounted for. Hence there is some more camouflage to impress the public that the Veterans' Administration is doing grand work. If our veterans are not in bad physical shape due to war service, why are 41,108 veterans listed to die this fiscal year? HARKIE.

Penny Wise, Pound Foolish.

To the Editor of The Post, Sir: Regarding the article written by Mr. Getty and published in The Washington Post of January 28, last, McCarl is the greatest tax eater Uncle Sam has and his is a perfectly useless office.

Consider the cost involved in saving a few pennies. A case in point: Comptroller General vs. the Bonding Co., dismissed in New York City Court. McCarl vs. Katherine Imbrie, verdict for Imbrie, Court in Washington. Katherine Imbrie vs. McCarl, verdict for Imbrie. Katherine Imbrie mandamus on McCarl, verdict for Imbrie—sum involved, $1,316. In each case McCarl had to print the report and the additional cost of court.

What did I get out of it. No money—just the satisfaction that I was right. Seriously consider what I have done for the widows who come after me. At least they will never curse me for my greed.

I implore you not to publish any more Leiterisms on the various Government bureaus. There is a crying need for clear cut stories on what makes the wheels go round. You do not need to waste valuable space.

KATHERINE IMBRIE.

Free School Lunches.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Much emphasis, in the beginning, was placed upon the fact that childre receiving free lunches in the District schools should be protected from any possible embarrassment. Selection was to be made most carefully by the teachers, and the more fortunate children were not to be unduly aware that these other children were receiving free lunches.

The Post of January 27 carries two large pictures of children eating these lunches, with the caption, "Polk School Children Eating Free Midday Meal." The pictures are very clear, and there is not the slightest possibility that the children in the lower picture will escape recognition by other pupils, neighbors, &c

Poverty is bitter; charity, no matter how kindly offered, is seldom sweet to the receiver. For a newspaper, supposedly interested in aiding unfortunate people, to so cruelly (even though thoughtlessly) expose these children and their parents to the pity of others who might just as well be left uninformed of their hard circumstances, is a matter not to be overlooked.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Superintendent Ballou, without whose authority, it is assumed, such pictures could not have been taken.

It is sincerely to be hoped that in future your paper, when reporting help given to sorely distressed people, will not find it necessary to embellish such articles with photographs. This is not the first instance—repeatedly on special days, like Thanksgiving, Christmas, &c., pictures have been shown of poor men, women and children feasting at some local restaurant, relief headquarters, or some similar place. Your subscribers are entitled to the news—but they do not need, and most of us do not want, pictures advertising other people's hardships. Stick to your slogan, heard on the air, each evening, "The news, and nothing but the news," and you may increase your circulation.

MARY B. McMAIN.

(Ed. Note—It may interest Mrs. McMain to know that both pictures were posed by the teachers of the children involved, and that in one case a group of parents was present and readily consented to the picture being taken.)

Can the Dollar Be Controlled?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mark Twain once remarked that there was more said about the weather and the least done about it of any subject discussed. It is a reminder of the present widespread talk about money, a thing so universally known, and yet in theory few know but little about. Those who claim to be experts on the question of money are largely experts in their own opinion. Students of economics are as far apart in their opinions as the two political parties on the tariff, or as certain branches of the Church are on the forms of baptism. Fortunately, the masses do not seem to take seriously the opinion of any man on the theoretical question of money, otherwise there would be widespread fear and distrust which would result in hoarding such as was never known.

Little is said about controlling money during periods of so-called good times. When money is plentiful we do not seem to be concerned about it other than to have a desire to acquire more and more of it. We are now talking about controlling the dollar. Back in the boom days, 1929 for instance, we were not trying to control the dollar; rather the dollar was controlling us. It was then and not now that the dollar destroyed us. We now discuss seriously the question of inflation. We can now see that we were in the midst of a great inflation during 1928 and 1929, yet it gave us no concern. Then it was an inflation of money values. Bootblack and banker alike, as viewed from the distance now, seemed to have no conception of values. Large sums of money were loaned on worthless stock certificates, worn-out farms, and chattels of questionable value. If the economists could tell us how to control the dollar in prosperous years they would render us a more practical service than trying to tell us how to control the dollar in lean years. If a people can be controlled by the dollar, can those same people control the dollar? The answer appears to be in the negative.

The Schooner Seth Parker.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There is much of interest in the schooner Seth Parker, which has been lying in this port. It may not be generally known that this type of vessel and rig is one of America's most important contributions to maritime history. The large schooner is distinctively American. Although now becoming rare, these vessels 20 and 30 years ago were so numerous that almost every view of the sea was enlivened by one or more of these beautiful multimasted schooners. They carried on an enormous coastal trade in lumber, coal and ice, and to a lesser degree some foreign trade.

The large schooner was developed primarily for the coastal trade, for, due to the arrangement of spars by which sails hoist up the masts and are spread by a gaff aloft and by a boom below, they are handled with great facility. These vessels can sail within 45-50 degrees of the wind, hence are efficient in the regions of variable breezes which prevail on the Atlantic Coast.

In distinction with the schooner rig is the so-called square rig, which is capable of sailing within only 65-70 degrees of the wind, but it has other advantages. In this type the masts are crossed by spars called yards, from which depend square sails, the lower corners, when set, being fast to the ends of the yard below. The square rig is most efficient when the winds are fair. Hence on the long voyages to Australia, China and around Cape Horn the square rigger is the favorite vessel. The routes are laid in such a way that the fair breezes of the trade winds are utilized for thousands of miles.

By using the auxiliary motive power installed in the Seth Parker, the long circuitous routes of the square rigger may be partially avoided, and the advantages of the schooner rig utilized.

The schooner needs but 10 to 12 men to man her, compared with 20 to 24 men of a square rigger of like tonnage. The sails of a square rigger are much more difficult to reef and furl than those of a schooner. In the former men are obliged to go aloft and out on the yards at dizzy heights, standing on footropes to do this work. In bad weather it is a perilous job. But in a schooner the sails are reefed and furled on or close to the deck. It, however, is bad enough, and many a man has been washed overboard in doing it.

Seamen in schooners are not always on the deck. Whenever the vessel tacks, and her topsails are set, a man must be aloft on each mast (except the aftermast) to pass the sheet over the horizontal stay that runs between the lower mastheads. But the topsails of a schooner are not usually carried in bad weather.

Sailing a vessel, taking your motive power out of the air with brain and fist, is a noble art, and it has played a notable part in the progress of the world.

Fair sailing, Capt. Lord.

GERSHOM BRADFORD.

F Street Trees.

To the Editor of The Post, Sir: The F street merchants from Ninth to Seventh streets will make a sad mistake if they allow the trees to be cut down in widening the street. Their best hope of attracting shoppers to that section of F street would be to make a shaded parkway, in the middle of the street, with perhaps a few benches under the trees and flower beds—something that would attract attention—and lure people that way, because it is different.

It is a mistaken idea to suppose that business is helped by making streets wider. Ask the merchants in the 1700 block H street what happened when the trees were chopped down, if there are any left to ask. That used to be a good business block when the people walked under the trees with time to look in the shop windows. Now they just rush through in their cars.

BARGERON.

NOT since the big controversy in Mr. Hoover's administration over balancing the budget have we had so much fun and excitement as we did in watching the fight between the Liberals and the Tories on the question of stabilizing the dollar. With what was described as approximate stabilization announced a few days ago by Mr. Roosevelt, I assume the fight is now about over. It is not over with Mr. Robey, this paper's own personal Tory. He says there hasn't been any stabilization at all.

But whether the fight is over or whether there is just to be a temporary lull with a general acceptance of the Administration's description of what has happened as an "approximate stabilization," things seem to have reached the stage where we on the sidelines can pass upon who was right, the Tories or the Liberals.

I am satisfied that is what Mr. Roosevelt would want us to do. Frankly, I have a suspicion that he really gives us these controversies, that the reason he embarks upon some of his policies, is with a view to entertaining us more than anything else. Just as in Latin-American countries the rulers provided plazas and band concerts and occasional revolutions, to keep the populace satisfied, so I believe Mr. Roosevelt gives us such diversions as the monetary policy.

And unmistakably that was a good show around the devaluation of the dollar. Even Al Smith got into it with a sarcasm about "baloney" dollars whereupon Father Coughlin took him on. The Liberals insisted heatedly that the Tories were simply enemies of the President, and the Tories insisted in turn, that Prof. Warren as a monetary expert, was a good egg hatcher. Gosh, but it was fun. I hope Mr. Robey is right and that the fight will break out again.

* * * *

But in passing upon the question of who was right in this first episode, if that is what it was, we must recall the contentions of the two sides. The Tories wanted stabilization. They came to the point of asking stabilization at any point. Stabilization somewhere, they insisted, was necessary to relieve the uncertainty so that business would know where it stood.

For several months the only response they got was a lot of epithets and occasionally a chuckle from the White House. Apparently that is where their squirming was enjoyed the most.

* * * *

Well, what has happened now since the so-called stabilization was announced? Security prices have boomed, commodity prices have enjoyed an advance and if the financial writers are correct, business in general has taken on a more roseate hue. Obviously then the Tories were the ones who were right and their denouncers the ones who were wrong.

It can hardly be argued that it was the devaluation of the dollar that brought this spurt about. At the time of the stabilization the dollar had already been beaten down close to 60 cents. The arbitrary price fixed was only just under that figure. So it must have been the stabilization or what was announced as that, that brought about the result.

If we wanted to be mean we could now check back and count the days that the spurt was held back by the insistence of the Liberals that the Tories were wrong.

Yet that might not be right. It may be that the Administration had to hold the stabilization back until it got the financial and business interests in just the proper mood, that if Mr. Roosevelt had given us stabilization earlier it would not have had the inflationary result. Maybe it was a case of having to let these interests clamor for stabilization for awhile, to work themselves up into such a high pitch that when he did give them something looking like it, at least, they just bubbled over with optimism.

England and the Irish Free State.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of the 26th of January, Willis J. Rutledge accuses you of being opposed to an Irish Republic, and then he writes "Every American that is worthy of the name would rejoice to see the end of English rule in Ireland." Mr. Rutledge does not appear to understand the subject he attempts to discuss. Let me tell him there is no English rule of the Free State. That part of Ireland is on the same basis as Canada and other dominions of the British Empire, but like Oliver Twist and the oatmeal, it wants more.

There is too much discussion about this little spot, Free State, Ireland, and all over the world it is becoming distasteful to the best element of the people. But let me tell Mr. Rutledge there are two classes of people in the Free State—one for and the other against a republic. The latter have the best of the argument, as Great Britain is the only outlet for the surplus production of the little country, which is chiefly cattle. At the present time there is much dissatisfaction prevailing all over the 26 counties. This condition has been brought about by De Valera refusing to sanction the payment of a sum of money legitimately due England, when the British blocked the exit of their cattle and other products by what is recognized as prohibition tariffs.

"THE NEW DEALERS"

.. will be on everyone's tongue from coast to coast .. in a few weeks.

But in Washington this illuminating and delightfully entertaining new volume about more than 50 personalities of the New Deal will become town talk within a week. For you .. in The Washington Post exclusively .. can begin reading "The New Dealers" far in advance of book publication.

What is "The New Dealers"?

The author prefers to remain unknown.

But he says in his introduction:

"This book attempts to tell who's who and why in this last round-up of American Democracy.

It's about time someone looked behind the measures for the men who make them.

So I have set down, as fairly as I could, the chief facts about some fifty-odd personalities of the New Deal: how they got into it, how they got that way in the first place, what they have done about it, how they get along with each other, and what they're like as human beings.

In other words, I have tried to give the low-down on the up-and-ups in this wild political free-for-all in Washington."

Among others covered in the chapter "The Praetorian Guard" are Louis Howe, Steve Early, Marvin McIntyre and Marguerite Le Hand.

In "The Black Chamber": James A. Farley, Edward J. Flynn, Frank C. Walker, Homer S. Cummings and Daniel Roper.

In "Sops to Cerberus": John Nance Garner, William H. Woodin, Cordell Hull, Claude Swanson and George Dern.

In "Frenzied Farming": Henry A. Wallace, Rexford Tugwell, Jerome N. Frank, Chester C. Davis, Mordecai Ezekiel, Louis Bean and Gardiner Means.

In "Mad Money": Henry Morgenthau, jr., Herbert E. Gaston, Herman Oliphant, Roswell Magill, William H. McReynolds, James P. Warburg, Dean Acheson, Lew Douglas, Jesse Jones, Eugene R. Black, Rogers and Warren.

In "Utopia on Tap": Frances Perkins, Harry L. Hopkins, Harold L. Ickes, Arthur Morgan and David Lilienthal.

In "Privy Councilors": Justice Brandeis, Adolf Berle, jr., Felix Frankfurter and Raymond Moley.

In "The Industrial Ogpu": General Johnson, Donald Richberg and Leo Wolman.

In "Fallen Angels": Bernard Baruch, Colonel Edward House, Huey Long, Newton D. Baker, John W. Davis, James M. Cox and Al Smith.

Although "THE NEW DEALERS" is not to be regarded as reflecting the editorial opinion of The Washington Post, we have no hesitancy in asserting that no more vividly interesting material has yet been written concerning the important personalities back of the New Deal.

American Cookery Resembles Series of Bad Marriages, Famous Willard Chef Asserts

Skyscrapers Testify To American Genius, Mme. Petroff Affirms

Wife of Bulgarian Minister Finds in Them Impressive Resemblance to Dolomites, Rugged and Square-Cut; New Member of Diplomatic Circle Eager to See Natural Wonders.

Women of the Diplomatic Corps in Washington, who find in the American scene much that is distinctively different from the culture and tradition of an older world, paint fascinating and authentic pictures of the lives of people in their own lands.

This article is the thirteenth in a series of interviews with hostesses in the diplomatic colony in the capital.

By Elizabeth Young.

In their stark grandeur, the skyscrapers of New York City, seen from the harbor, have a strange resemblance to the Dolomite mountains in Italy.

Such is the impression they made on Mme. Petroff, wife of the Minister of Bulgaria, when she glimpsed them first three months ago, on her arrival in America.

"They have the same peculiar formation—rugged, square cut," she said. "They are a wonderful testimonial to the genius of America. But I question whether humans ever can achieve in architecture the grandeur and simplicity of Nature."

"I want to see your great mountains in America, the Rockies, the Sierra Nevadas. Mountains, to me, are the most inspiring and beautiful manifestation of nature. To stand in the presence of their dignity and calm, to realize the centuries of forgotten strife and effort they have looked down upon, is to make us wonder what all our petty differences are about.

Education in Travel.

"One of our ambitions, now that we are in America, is to travel the whole country, to know it in all its aspects, and to arrive at an understanding of the soul of the people."

An English woman by birth, Mme. Petroff had traveled extensively in Europe before her marriage to Mr. Petroff Tchomakoff, when he was counselor at the Bulgarian legation in London. After seven years in London, he was transferred to Hungary for six years, before coming to Washington.

Both Mme. Petroff and the Minister believe travel to be an integral part of real education. They welcome the opportunity of change and travel for their two children.

"While travel does indubitably break into the regular curriculum of schooling for young children, I believe it has its compensation in quickening their interest in the world about them," said Mme. Petroff, offering me one of those delicious cigarettes for which Bulgaria is famed. "They become mentally alert, develop poise and acquire an early social experience in the broadest sense which enables them to meet life four-square. To know and understand many countries is, in my opinion, to have many different souls."

Children and Patriotism.

"After all, very little of our school room information remains with us once we have left our text books behind, unless the facts were connected in our minds with actual experience or observation. I am afraid I shall rediscover that truth with regret if the time comes when our children may expect me to help them with their lessons."

Her daughter, Sonia, is four years old; and Vladimir is 18 months.

Mme. Petroff is pleased at the prospect of entering her daughter in an American kindergarten school. She believes it the finest training of the kind in the whole world for very young children. And while she approves of an international background for early schooling, nevertheless she feels a sense of patriotism and love of country should be instilled in the child while young.

"At some time in their life, I hope my children may have a period of schooling in Bulgaria, that they may come to love and understand and appreciate the country's ideals and traditions," she said. "But I think, no matter how much they may travel, how far they may go or how long they may stay away from their native land children never become detached so long as their parents give an example of patriotic devotion."

Regrets Peasant Change

Mme. Petroff spoke with regret of the growing tendency among the Bulgarian peasantry to doff their picturesque national costumes in favor of "town clothes."

"Bulgarian peasant women have always worn such beautiful national costumes," she said. "They make them with their own hands. They weave and dye the cloth, cut the patterns, and in making the embroideries for which they are reputed, they achieve the most exquisite colors and designs and display the greatest taste and variety. The costumes vary with the localities, you know."

"Life in Bulgaria is still patriarchal. The family bonds are very strong. Women still lean upon the men, and the idea of a woman having to depend upon herself for support is practically unknown to them. I should say there was no strong feminist tendency toward 'careers for women' in Bulgaria as yet; although we have our quota of women barristers, physicians and educators."

She told of the great love the Bulgarian people have for King Boris and Queen Ioanna.

"As you know, Bulgaria is a kingdom," she said. "But at one time, when it seemed that some forces might compel it to become a republic, the general sentiment, often expressed, was 'Our king shall be our president.' It would be impossible to find a man who better knows or loves his country than King Boris."

Bulgarian Enterprise.

"The Bulgarians are an enterprising people. Some writer with remarkable insight and aptitude for expression, has called them 'the Scotch of the Balkans.' They are hardworking, honest, thrifty, brave and intensely patriotic. And they are very intelligent and have an extraordinary eagerness for learning."

"When Bulgaria was liberated in 1879, 90 per cent of the population was illiterate. Half a century of opportunity has made an almost unbelievable difference. Only 5 per cent of the population is thus classified today. Funds for education comprise the largest single item in the public budget. This gives some idea of their progressiveness.

If Mme. Petroff has a hobby, it is the cultivation and arrangement of flowers. Plotting new arrangements of blossoms for room and table decorations gives her keen pleasure.

"Flowers afford one a little world of fairyland in the midst of prosaic things," she said. "It is surprising the number of Englishwomen who insist upon caring for their gardens with their own hands. To bring to life the flowers they love to arrange is not work to them. It is sheer pleasure."

Career of Diplomat's Wife.

Tact she considers the most valuable of the social graces expected of a diplomatic hostess. And tact can be cultivated, she said.

"As a general rule, a woman is not called upon to preside over a legation or embassy without having had opportunity which prepares her for the social responsibility," said Mme. Petroff. "Usually she has married her husband when he was a secretary or counsellor. During the years of his advancement in the diplomatic service, she has absorbed unconsciously the requirements of the position of diplomatic hostess."

"Tact, which is always essential in maintaining harmonious social relations in ever so small a group, can be cultivated. If one determines from the moment one marries a diplomat, that one is going to be a help to one's husband, and sets oneself about it, it is not too difficult."

Tomorrow's Post will give you a picture of life in Cape Town, as painted by Mrs. Ralph William Close, wife of the new minister from the Union of South Africa.

Orange Crepe Gown Worn by Maharanee

While the kitchen brigade sits down to lunch, and the pots and pans are for the moment idle, Chef Linassier, of the Willard, relates in his crisp French, his adventures in the hotel kitchens. From the wealth of his great experience he makes many observations, witty and serious, unusual and practical. He explains what he thinks of American cooking, how the French draw their wines, how a big hotel kitchen is managed and gives one of his favorite recipes.

Gallows of Chance

By E. Phillips Oppenheim

The Story Thus Far.

Sir Humphrey Rossiter, Home Secretary of Great Britain, has refused to grant a reprieve to Cecil Brandt, condemned to be hanged for murdering Gervase Benham, friend of his actress wife. Returning to London in a hired automobile from a visit with Lord Edward Keynsham, Sir Humphrey is abducted by a mysterious band and placed upon a gallows. The leader tells him he will be hanged unless he grants a reprieve to Brandt, doomed to die the next morning.

As the trap is about to be sprung, a messenger arrives with word that Katherine Brandt, the slayer's wife, is at Rossiter's London home with fresh evidence. Sir Humphrey is released. Mrs. Brandt tells Rossiter her husband killed Benham in a jealous rage on finding him in her bedroom. Discovering his suspicions unjustified, Brandt carried the body to the study and compelled Mrs. Brandt to preserve silence.

Sir Humphrey promises he will grant her husband—a man of mysterious antecedents—a reprieve. She departs. Rossiter picks up his telephone to call Wandsworth Prison and collapses in a faint. Upon being revived he learns Brandt has been hanged. Subsequently he invites his old friend, Katherine Brandt, to dinner. She vanishes after leaving home. Scotland Yard detectives hasten to Sir Humphrey's home—and find he has disappeared mysteriously.

Young Detective Pank, of Scotland Yard, seeking the mystery house to which the abductors took Sir Humphrey, rents a room from his uncle, Elijah Pank, in Norwich. He learns one "Tom Bowhill," secretive and mysterious, had rented a room from his uncle at the time of Sir Humphrey's adventure. He suspects Bowhill was the driver of the rented machine. He meets Humble, an ugly looking fellow, in a "pub." Subsequently he discovers three strangers had stopped at a hotel in Norwich. He learns the men had hired Humble, a painter, to design a set in a film studio. The set was a replica of a prison. Humble also built a gallows in the studio.

The studio was owned by Clarence Edwards, a producer, who had sold the building. Edwards is placed under arrest in London.

"Then one day a gentleman drove up in a motor car. He asked to look around the place. He asked me whether I had a good head carpenter—whether I could build up scenes. Of course I had. Of course I could. He asked me to name a price for the place as it stood. Well, I did. 'You can have the cash tomorrow morning,' he promised, 'if you will carry out a commission for me.' Think of that, gentlemen, I ask you. What an escape! A new chance in life. I didn't want to go bankrupt. Nothing of the sort had ever happened to me before. What do you suppose I did? Why, I sold out and we worked like slaves for his commission, and we worked with a seal upon our mouths."

"And who is this benefactor?" Col. Matterson asked.

The man Edwards took no notice. He continued to address himself to Pank.

Emotion Felt by Others.

"There were only six of us from the first. One—my brother—his son, the head carpenter, named Humble, who had every reason to do as he was told, for no one liked his antecedents, and two apprentices. I called them together and told them what had happened. I promised them all the money that was owing and a thundering good sum as well, and they swore before their God that they would never breathe a word to a soul of the work they were doing. You know what the commission was I accepted? We built up an imitation prison cell, then we had a paved courtyard outside with rigged-up imitation red-brick walls and an iron gate, and finally—we built an execution shed."

There was a brief, throbbing silence.

Some part of the man's emotion seemed to have its effect even upon his two questioners. He, himself, was in a bad way. He mopped his forehead and gasped for breath. Pank mercifully left him alone for a moment. As soon as he showed some signs of recovery, however, he continued.

"You built the real thing?" he demanded.

"We built the real thing," Edwards admitted.

"And you were able to get the details right," Pank continued, "because your head carpenter had served his apprenticeship to Prince, the hangman. The only reason he was not taken on when Prince died was because he couldn't keep sober."

Edwards shivered in his chair.

"I don't know how you knew that," he muttered. "I should have thought for his own sake Humble would have kept his mouth closed. He made it at first without the drop. My client came and he was not satisfied. He wanted the rope slung in the orthodox way and he wanted the drop. Well, Humble soon arranged that. It was all perfect one night about the middle of December—I've got the date in my book—he came over and took possession. He was satisfied, and he paid down the money. Why, he paid marvelous. When it was all over he gave £50 each to every one who had worked, to swear once more that they would never tell a soul what they had been doing.

Honest Lot of Chaps.

"They were an honest lot of chaps. With all their money back and a good bit over, what do you think they did? I should have sworn that there was not one of them would have breathed a word, and how you got to know about it I can't imagine. We handed over the place and left. A few hours later, by arrangement, we were back again and we burned and destroyed every one of the properties; we pulled the place to pieces, so that there was not a yard of the stuff left. I have never seen the gentleman since, and what happened the night we all saw the place lit up, or who visited it, I don't know. I banked my money, came up here, took this office, and I'm preparing to start business."

"You are trying to make us believe then, I suppose," Col. Matterson said sternly, "that you never knew about the man who was very nearly hanged in your infernal place?"

"Before God I never knew it, sir," Edwards declared. "Humble was the only one of us allowed there. We had no idea what took place. I never knew it, sir, and what's more, I don't believe there was anything wrong."

"Tell me, then," Pank asked, "why do you suppose your benefactor—we are going to talk about him directly—why do you suppose he insisted upon your making the drop the full 25 feet with the trap-door and the lever?"

"I don't know anything about that," Edwards muttered hoarsely. "He was a gentleman. I am sure he didn't do anything wrong."

"You seem very confident about some things," Col. Matterson observed. "What did you think he wanted the place for?"

"To play a joke on someone, of course," Edwards replied. "Or it might have been to get the idea for some sort of private theatricals."

Secrecy Demanded.

"You hadn't even the curiosity to ask him?" the subcommissioner demanded incredulously.

"The first condition of the bargain," Edwards cried, striking the desk once more with his fist, "was that no questions were to be asked, and the second was—silence afterward. We kept the first. Now, my God, I've broken the second. I have broken my word and I have told everything because you made me. I never reckoned about having the police in the matter at all."

"But you have not told us everything yet," Col. Matterson reminded him ominously. "You have not told us what we must know—the name of your generous friend from whom you build this cinema scene."

"And, by God, I never will," Edwards shouted. "He acted like a gentleman to me, and I'm keeping my word."

He sat upright in his chair again. There was a gleam of dogged obstinacy in his eyes. No one spoke.

"You hear?" he went on. "A Norfolk man doesn't often go back on his word, and I am not going back on mine."

Col. Matterson shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, Edwards," he said, "we shall certainly not try to persuade you. You had better get on your coat. Smithers, call in your men. They can take Edwards to the Vine street cells. He can be moved afterward. I will go round and make the charge."

There was a wild light in the man's eyes as he stared at what was going on. Smithers opened the door. The two plain-clothes men entered. The subcommissioner pointed to the occupant of the chair.

"Take this man to Vine street police station," he directed. "I will be along in a few minutes. I don't think you need to handcuff him."

"Do you mean that you are sending me to prison?" Edwards called out, shrinking back in his chair.

"No alternative, my man," was the subcommissioner's reply. "We have to know the name of your principal. It is possible—I won't say certain—that we might have taken a lenient view of your situation if you had made a clean breast of it. You can't defy the law, though. There are at least five different charges under which you can be dealt with—unless you change your mind."

The plain-clothes men were standing on either side of him. There was authority in their poise and manner.

Pank Bares Plot.

"Listen, Edwards," Pank intervened, "I'll tell you something. I'll tell you something that the others don't know yet. I could answer their question. I know to whom you sold your studio. I know for whom you built that horrible place. You are doing no good by keeping the name back. You are simply making a foolish effort to pit yourself against the law, and it can't be done."

"You don't know his name," Edwards cried stubbornly. "Not a soul knows it."

"Indeed I do," Pank assured him. "I know the chauffeur who drove the hired car in which his victim was brought there. I know who employed that chauffeur, and even where he is at the present moment. It was the same man who found you that money and bought your studio."

Linassier Finds Phenomenal Mixtures Pass Here as Food

Italians No Better on Cuisine, He Says, Having Aberrations on Subject of Dough; But United States Is Comfortable to Live In and He Proffers Recipe as Gratitude.

A home in which to live, clothes to wear, and food to eat—these are the fundamental necessities of life. Fundamental as they are, they are packed with romance and artistry—they glitter with excitement and glamour.

Chefs who have reached the top of the profession are veritable artists in their line—sensitive to harmony and form, to composition and color. Theirs is a creative art—an art that in the truest sense of the word appeals to the good tastes of the people.

This is the first of a series of interviews with the chefs of Washington, whose handiwork delights the palate of the gourmet.

By Susan Mills.

In the mind of a French chef, American cooking is like a series of bad marriages. Chef Linassier, of the Willard Hotel, waved his hands and rolled his eyes in contemplation of the subject.

"Mon Dieu, Mon Dieu! The Americans, they eat their food either boiled in water with no seasoning, or they eat a phenomenal mixture. There are some things that just won't marry each other, like a man and woman who can't get along. Yet you Americans keep on making these unhappy marriages, salad, par example. You take fruit, lettuce, jelly, cheese and vinegar, and mix them together, and what do you get? Bah!"

His fist came down with a whack on the top of his desk. He leaned back in his office chair his mobile face a picture of disgust.

"And the Italians, they are equally bad. They are crazy on the subject of dough. Always dough, dough, dough! They stuff themselves with spaghetti and ravioli, and get fatter and fatter. It is no sane way to eat.

"Americans from small cities will not eat other than American cooking. I come to this country after I am chef in the Hotel de Paris, and I will not cook American food. No, I refuse. But they must have it, so I must make it. Yet, these Americans go to Europe, and there, they are apt pupils in the art of the cuisine. They taste French food, they like it, and then will have nothing else. They learn, too, what wines to have with dinner, and when they should be served. They demand their sauterne with the fish and must have their champagne.

"I cannot understand how Americans can have prohibition for 14 years. Regardez ce qu'on boit!—Look at what they drink! They make cognac in ten minutes. They take a 'thimbleful of coloring,' he measured on a fat finger, "a half-gallon of booze, a quarter-gallon water, and pfft! They have cognac! And they think it is good!

"Ah, the booze. Ninety per cent alcohol and what else, the good Lord only knows.

Wine Governed by Moon.

"And with the dinner—after a delicious filet of sole—they drink what? A glass of water. In France we have the good sautern. As for me, at the hotel, I drink water, like the poor Americans, and at home—chez moi, du booze. I manage to drink a little booze.

"In France they know how wine should be made. It is drawn according to the phases of the moon. A good wine maker knows when the wine should be drawn. He goes out at night, looks at the moon, and if it is not right, he will not draw the wine. It is very important. The moon must be right, or the wine is bad.

"But I like America for its comfort. In France one must buy an apartment, and it is miserable living. Here, one can rent an apartment for $50, and it is comfortable. Yes, it is a good country to live in.

"No, I have no American wife, she is French. But then, sometimes one can look at the American girl, as one can taste a new dish—n'est-ce-pas?

Kitchen Battle Array.

"And I never learned English—when I was young I was too busy making love to learn the language. All the cooks speak French, so there is no need.

"The cooks here are all French, Swiss or Italian. In Washington kitchens there are only about 30 cooks, but in New York, Paris, London and the big cities, they have a kitchen brigade of 80 to 90 men.

"Yes, it is like an army, the kitchen brigade. I am the head chef, there is an assistant chef, then the chef de partie. These chefs are in charge of the various departments of the kitchen, one of the roasts, another of the ice-box, one each for the pastry, the side-dishes, the fish, and the butchering. Each chef de partie has about 12 men under him.

"I was just a little boy, when I served my apprenticeship. I was the kitchen boy in a restaurant at Tours, it is the garden of France, the most beautiful part of the country. I served apprenticeship in cooking, and in the making of pastry. Then I went to Nice, and from there to Italy. Then when I was 17 I went to the Ritz, in Paris.

Why Cooks Wear Tall Hats.

"When I was 20 I went to London. Later I was the head chef at the Ritz-Carlton there. You would like to have a recipe I made for the King of Portugal, and the King of Spain, yes? Ah, yes, the Lamb Forestiere.

"Why do chefs wear tall hats? It is a custom, only that. No, the column of hot air is not good for the brain, ha, that is a funny question.

"But the recipe, here, I give it to you."

Saddle of Lamb Forestiere.

Cook upon bed of vegetables, for flavor, then add white wine. When cooked remove saddle and carve a hole on each side of the central bone, leaving only an edge around the saddle.

Partly fill this hole with puree of mushroom mixed with fine Bechamel sauce that has been prepared before.

Then slice the meat that has been removed and replace it on top of the stuffing so as to reform the saddle and as you do so, put between each slice of meat some of the stuffing and a slice of truffle.

When this is done cover with light Mornay sauce and pass under broiler.

This is a dish of Chef Linassier's own creation, enjoyed by notables dining at the Ritz-Carlton, London, as well as at the Willard in Washington.

Tomorrow another of Washington's chefs will give you secrets of cuisine through The Post's Woman's Page.

Artificial Silks Gain Standing In Style World

Many Rayon Evening Gowns Seen in Paris; Wedding Costumes Made of It.

Artificial silks, formerly relegated to the sports or inexpensive frock world, have stepped up so many notches that they now rival real silks at elaborate and glittering evening affairs. A large number of rayon gowns circled the dance floor at Ciro's restaurant in Paris on a recent gala night.

The gown that attracted the most attention was from the house of Bruyere and was made of double-faced white rayon satin. A sparkling ornament was attached to the narrow shoulder straps in back. With the exception of the straps, the back was bare to the waist. Bruyere was also represented by a rayon satin dress in steel blue with short matching capelet, bordered with blue fox.

One of the dancers was gowned in an Augustabernard model of black rayon flamisol with two panels in back extending into a train. The narrow train was lined with cardinal red flamisol. Another striking gown from Augustabernard was made of black taffeta. Old-fashioned ruchings were draped about the neck in double bertha effect. Ruchings also outlined the waistline and the bottom of the rustling gown. The dull black was unrelieved by any color or ornament.

Rayon crepes with twinkling gold and silver threads were glimpsed on several smart young women at Ciro's. White and pastel shades were usually used for the crepe dresses.

Artificial silk, not content with occupying the spotlight at night clubs and restaurants, is also appearing at fashionable weddings. When Maggy Rouff designed the costumes for a Parisian bridal party a few weeks ago she used stiff pale blue rayon satin for the flower girls' quaint little frocks. Shirred bands of the material served as trimming.

Japanese Opera Star Finds Art Is What All Understand

Hizi Koyke Became Singer On Stage Quite Without Premeditation.

Tonight gay lights beckon in front of many opera houses. In bleak studios young singers cheerfully practice their scales. Their hearts set upon that magic land behind the footlights, they dream of audiences who will thrill to the magic of their music.

"But," Hizi Koyke, Japanese prima donna, said yesterday, "Perhaps they are not very wise. For where the lights are strongest the shadows are darkest. And many find that the applause dies away and the bouquets hurt with their thorns."

As for Hizi herself she never meant to be a prima donna at all. She came to America to study psychology, took voice training to improve her speaking voice, and suddenly found herself singing in grand opera.

"If any one had told me when I was in Japan that I would be on the stage I would not have believed it," she said. "For over there my family thought of actors as high-class beggars. I never told them that I was singing in opera, and they only discovered it accidentally three years after my debut. All that time they thought I was studying.

"And yet I love my art. I love it because it is a language every one understands. It is like a smile or a baby's cry. It knows no race or age restrictions. All artists understand each other.

"And although I sometimes get lonely I would not give it up. I feel that I am doing something beside carrying beauty to people through my music. Whenever I meet some one in America and they like me I am carrying Japan to other people, making them know Japanese people as they really are."

It took Hizi seven years to make up her mind to marry an American concert artist.

"My romance is very dull, though," she said. "He kept asking, and I kept putting him off, and finally I said 'yes.' Of course I had wanted to all the time. But I thought it wise to be cautious because I was Japanese and he was American.

HIZI KOYKE.

White House Social Season Nears Close

Mrs. Roosevelt Will Be Hostess Today to Cabinet Wives; Speaker and Mrs. Rainey to Be Feted; Army-Navy Event Thursday.

When the snow first fell, the White House was the scene of much gaiety. Now, after such a busy seven days, the Chief Executive and the First Lady are quietly sitting back with only members of the family present, and are watching Nature's sadly departing Northern garb.

Sachet Powder Of 'Mauve' Era Back in Favor

Patent Leather Bags in Gay Coloring for Spring Appear in Shops.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

Along with the return of bicycling, fitted jackets, and bustle effects we're pleased to note that sachet, too, is gradually being reinstated.

It somehow slipped from the important place it occupied in the Mauve Decade, and in recent years has been terribly neglected. Now however, it looks as though we'll be tucking it away in bureau drawers, and in handkerchief boxes, just as our grandmothers used to do.

The fragrance of sachet can not be duplicated by perfume, even though the scents are the same. A certain subtle sweetness emanates from the powder and seems to grow in one's clothes. With perfume it's always obviously placed. That is why both are essential. The daintiness of sachet is something entirely personal; perfume always a more foreign element.

A well-known dealer in fragrances has recently put on the market some sachets in pastel satins—wrapped in celophane to preserve their enchanting fragrance. "These are," declares this connoiseur of perfumes, "for madam who ees—what you say?—fasteejus!"

Hair Line of Beauty.

Part of every woman's beauty depends on her hair line. Thousands of years ago an old writer praised his queen by saying she had that "rare mark of divine beauty, a hair line of five points." He referred to the two points on either side of the face above or below the temple, and the "widow's peak."

Unfortunately when the hair is not given the proper care these marks are liable to become less and less distinct. As an aid to women with five, four, or even one beauty point a group of hair specialists recommend the use of a pomade which should be rubbed on the spots where the hair is thinning out.

It is considered excellent for use on the dried-out, split ends of hair.

Non-Wobble Card Tables.

New card tables have arrived on Connecticut Avenue. These have that happy faculty of being both ornamental and sturdy. The tops are made of a material with a moire finish, and the borders are a smooth shiny wood painted with Japanese designs.

And the slogan, "When they're up they're up," is really right. Once the legs have been pulled into place they fasten firmly. The tables are available in black, jade green, and Chinese red.

Spring Bags Arrive.

Bright patent leather bags, with the brisk look of spring about them are making their formal debut in a well-known F street shop. For months they've been straggling in, but not until now have they had the backing of the fashion dictators and shoppers at the same time. Only recently have they been featured as high spots of the spring styles.

There's a double vanity bag beautifully finished with a celanese lining. It has two sections, both ample for carrying a lipstick, compact, cigarette case and the whatnots generally found in feminine purses. This bag comes in red, green, black, brown, blue and white. Incidentally the buyer said she had a Paris hint that white bags with dark suits were going to be the thing!

Not only were the bags available in a gay variety of colors but in numerous and sundry unusual styles. One of them had an amber handle in the shape of a bracelet. Others, quite the most dapper, had bright figured pecal linings.

These bags are all mediumly priced and the very newest bags on the market. During this time of the year, when we are expanding our wardrobe to suit the gradual change of seasons it is a great pity to mar a new ensemble with a pocketbook which looks its age.

Bargain hunters will find beside the new bags, a few from the winter's stock left in a Connecticut avenue shop. The conservative styles here may be depended on to look well any season of the year.

Modernistic Originality.

Designers of modernistic furniture are happy in the freedom offered by their art. The rules of their trade do not tie them down to the usual forms. Originality is a goal which is constantly worked toward.

Mute evidence of all this is the unusual modernistic ashstand-table combination on display in an F street shop. A black and chrome ashstand balances as on one leg like a crane. It is joined at the base to a slightly higher chrome and black, round-top table large enough for a small tray, a drink or two balances on another leg. The two pieces are removable so that the tray may be placed on the higher leg, or visa versa. A small coffee table matching this piece may be bought for small cost.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4205, Extension 105, for further information. Or write, inclosing a stamped, addressed envelope.

I Lit Twin Candles.

By Katherine Smith.

I lit twin candles, wanly glowing,
On the alter of
My first and only sanctifying
Lonely love.
Behind twin candles, darkly smoking,
I once saw and knew
My first love's dying face—the closing
Eyes of you.

What Today Means

"Aquarius."

If February 5 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10 to 11 a. m., from 3 to 4 p. m. and from 7 to 8 p. m. The danger periods are from 8 to 9 a. m., from 1 to 2 p. m. and from 10:30 to 11:30 p. m.

If you were born on February 5 you display such a safe and sane nature that people instinctively feel they can burden you with their troubles, trials, tribulations and confidences. Do not allow yourself to be imposed upon. You too readily assume other people's responsibilities, thus jeopardizing your individual interests. On this date be careful not to allow a friend or relative to shift upon your shoulders a burden they should carry themselves. After you have solved your own problems you can then give time to your friends.

The woman born on February 5 is innately refined. If born on February 5, you are extremely fond of social life and aspire to be recognized as a leader in your set. Much more can be accomplished by courtesy and tact than by snobbishly hurting the feelings of people you do not feel are socially your equal. It may prove most advisable for you not to let any one persuade you that it is fashionable to be fast or indiscreet. As a rule the average man who devotes a great deal of time and thought to social affairs does not make the most satisfactory husband. Look for more than merely social position when you marry.

The man born on February 5 is inclined to be a quiet, suave and benevolent gentleman. He has the happy faculty of being able to adjust himself to the individual with whom he is doing business, whether it is a banker, baker, capitalist or candlestick maker. Should February 5 be your birthday, see that your desire to be a good fellow does not cause you to disregard home obligations by being swayed by others to do what your conscience warns you is not only foolish, but extravagant. You have a vast amount of will power, use it.

People born on February 5 many times allow their sympathy for those less fortunate than themselves to warp their better judgment. It might be well to remember "charity begins at home,' for many people are tempted to help strangers, when members of their own family need their aid, and are entitled to their first consideration. Too many people are forgetting today that "blood is thicker than water."

Successful people born on February 5:

John Witherspoon, clergyman and educator.
Zebulon M. Pike, soldier.
Ole B. Bull, violinist
Dwight L. Moody, evangelist.
James Otis, orator and statesman.
Hiram S. Maxim, inventor.

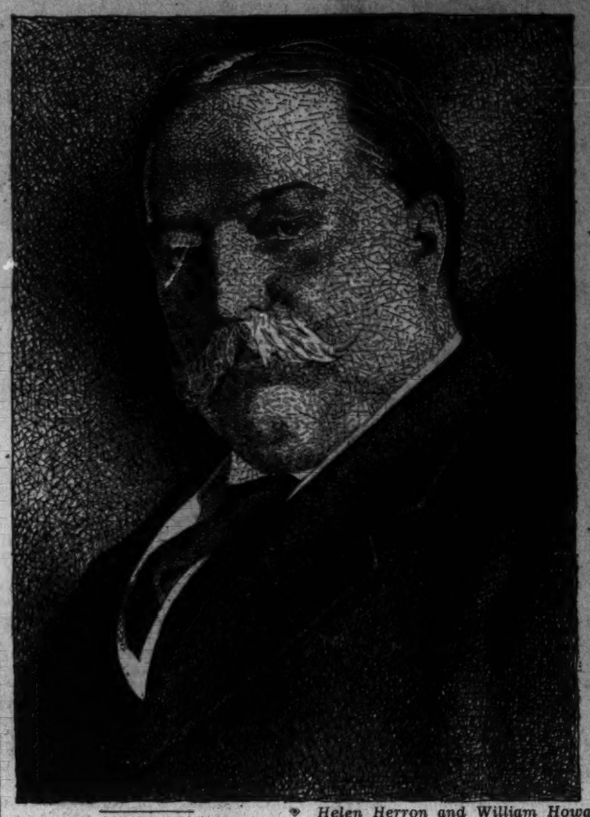
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

William Howard Taft—Helen Herron



Helen Herron and William Howard Taft, who was to rise to the highest place in both the executive and judicial branches of the Government, grew up together in their native Cincinnati and early in life found many interests in common, artistic and recreational. Miss Herron became the moving spirit of a "salon" and her romance with the future President was one of several which started in that congenial circle.

Future President and Chief Justice and Wife Childhood Sweethearts.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

When it is April in Washington, and a pink glory spreads around the Speedway and the Tidal Basin from the beautiful cherry trees, gay with a multitude of delicate blossoms, Washingtonians who know their city always think gratefully of the former White House chatelaine whose foresight and capacity for friendship made this perennial floral delight possible.

It was Mrs. William Howard Taft, who, as she drove around Washington in the first White House automobile, had the happy inspiration that what is now Potomac Park could be redeemed from its barrenness and become a real park on the river shore resembling the famous Luneta in Manila with which she had become acquainted, when her husband was Governor General of the Philippine Islands.

Officials carried through her suggestions. Soon a bandstand was built and concerts by military bands stationed in and about Washington were arranged for Wednesday and Saturday. On the opening day Mrs. Taft was very happy for she knew the thousands crowding the park for the first concert by the United States Marine Band meant that her plan was a success.

Japan's Cherry Tree Gift.

So enthusiastic was the city over the idea, Mrs. Taft thought she would add more beauty by having cherry trees set out. Word of this reached Japan. Tokyo's high officials were so pleased with the plan that a gift of 3,000 trees came to the United States from Japan. These were planted along the Speedway. The floral visitors flourished and waxed apace. Now the National Capital cherishes the cloud of pink and white cherry blooms as its very own spring beauty.

For Mrs. Taft it must have been and is—for she is still an honored resident of this city—a fulfillment of the vision she brought back with her from the Orient of exquisite vistas of cherry blossoms and centuries-old palaces, little vignettes as it were, of loveliness.

In the history of Ladies of the White House, there is no more gracious chapter of hospitality and friendliness and real elegance than those years in the early part of the twentieth century when Mrs. Taft was its mistress. Those who know the Tafts well realize that the romance that bound their lives together was a very beautiful one, culminating a friendship that had begun in their childhood in Cincinnati.

The Tafts and the Herrons were first citizens of that midwestern city. William Howard Taft, genial and full of merriment, as a boy even as a man, came from sturdy pioneer stock, with a New England background.

Judge Taft's Father.

Back of him were valiant souls who dared their fortunes in what was to them a new country, far from the hills of their native New England. It was a far cry in those days of poor transportation from a Massachusetts village to Cincinnati. But the Taft of that day managed it. By 1857, we find a certain Alphonso Taft, a lawyer of parts, in that city. There was joy in his household when a son was born to Judge Taft and his good wife, on September 8, 1857, named William Howard Taft, who was to become, although they knew it not at the time, the twenty-seventh President of the United States.

His mother, Louisa Marie Torrey, was the second wife of Judge Taft. There were other children before long in the happy household, and his half brother, the late Charles P. Taft, of Cincinnati, son of Judge Taft and his first wife, Fannie Phelps Taft, was a jolly companion.

Early in his life, William Howard Taft had impressed on him the family ideal that public service was a public trust. He saw this practically demonstrated when the family came to Washington to live while Judge Taft served President Grant as Secretary of War and Attorney General in the great war hero's Cabinet. Later President Arthur sent Alphonso Taft as United States Minister to Austria and then to Russia. Any son growing up in the home of Alphonso Taft would, therefore, hear much of National affairs and old European court and diplomatic life, a splendid training, by the way, for his future duties as President.

Education and Fun.

From boyhood William Howard Taft's ambition was to follow in the legal footsteps of his distinguished father. Perhaps among those early dreams was the daring one that some day he might sit on the Supreme Court bench of his native State. His thoughts never soared, we may imagine, to the thing that was to come true, that on a far off day, he was to sit in the center of the country's most august tribunal, the United States Supreme Court, as its Chief Justice.

Meantime, the job was to get a good education and "Bill" Taft managed to acquire that and a good deal of fun at the same time in football, baseball, wrestling and boxing and the social delights of the time for young people in Cincinnati. At seventeen he was ready for Yale.

By this time "Nellie" Herron, one of the eight children of Judge John W. and Harriet Collins Herron, was very much in the scene. From coasting down the steep hills of Cincinnati, the favorite partner of young Taft's bobsled had come the joys of being together in amateur theatricals and charades. Both loved music and they belonged to the same literary society.

Helen Herron's Salon

But Helen Herron had a serious purpose in life, too. She wanted to be a school teacher and became one. Her friendship with William Howard Taft was now ripening into romance. She established a "salon" where the talent and wit of Cincinnati met to exchange ideas on art, government and philosophy.

Cupid also attended the gatherings because President Taft pointed out, in later years, that Helen Herron's salon had given rise to two marriages, one of them in 1886, being their own.

Their marriage was a social event of the day and their multitude of friends rejoiced that young Taft, the popular Yale graduate and promising lawyer, had found his bride in his childhood friend and companion, Helen Herron, also popular, gifted and an outstanding figure in her own right.

Their married life began in Cincinnati, after a wedding trip abroad. There the happy couple kept up their many activities and Mrs. Taft was a leader in organizing the Cincinnati Orchestra Association which insured good music to the city for many years to come. Perhaps they thought all their lives would be passed there, but Fate had other things in store for them.

It was 1900 and there were children in the Taft nursery, Robert Alphonso Taft, the oldest son; Helen Herron Taft, and the baby Charles Phelps Taft, 2nd. It was a merry family and a devoted one. Yet, when the call came to pull their home stakes and embark for strange lands in the Orient, because of Mr. Taft's appointment by President McKinley as head of a commission to establish a civil government in the Philippines, there was not a murmur of protest from the gallant young wife and mother.

Homes Found in Orient.

In the Far East new homes were found, first in a bungalow across from a Buddhist Temple for a summer in Yokohama, where the monotonous beat of the priests' drum mingled with the laughter of the Taft children at play; then to a roomy old house in Manila. It was different from their Cincinnati home but the blue reflection of the bay shone through windows made of pearl shell and the house was cool.

When Commissioner Taft became Gov. Gen. Taft the family moved into the Malacanan Palace. As First Lady of the Philippines Mrs. Taft was most popular and the governor general basked in the serenity of ideal domestic surroundings. Mrs. Taft was hostess to all the Americans of the Occupation, making a little center of home life for these exiled folk from the distant United States who were aiding her husband in his task of governing this island people.

The kaleidescope changed quickly now. More years in the Philippines, then Washington; Taft, Secretary of War under President Theodore Roosevelt. White House visions and their reality and that stormy Inaugural Day, March 4, 1909, when Mrs. Taft dressed in springlike purple satin, sat beside her husband on the way through cheering crowds from the Capitol to the White House, she being the first President's wife to ride thus in history.

Mrs. Taft's Hospitality.

Washington cherishes still its memories of the stately hospitality of the White House while Mrs. Taft was its mistress. She was no stranger there, of course, because she had come as a girl of 17 to visit Mrs. Rutherford Hayes, and, of course, while her husband was Secretary of War, she had taken part in many official functions in the historic mansion.

But now it was "home" and she made it one.

After the White House came ten years of scholastic atmosphere with the former President professor of law at Yale University, then "Washington" flashed again on the screen of their lives and the devoted disciple of Blackstone received the accolade of his long service by being appointed Chief Justice of the United States by President Warren G. Harding, a fellow Ohioan.

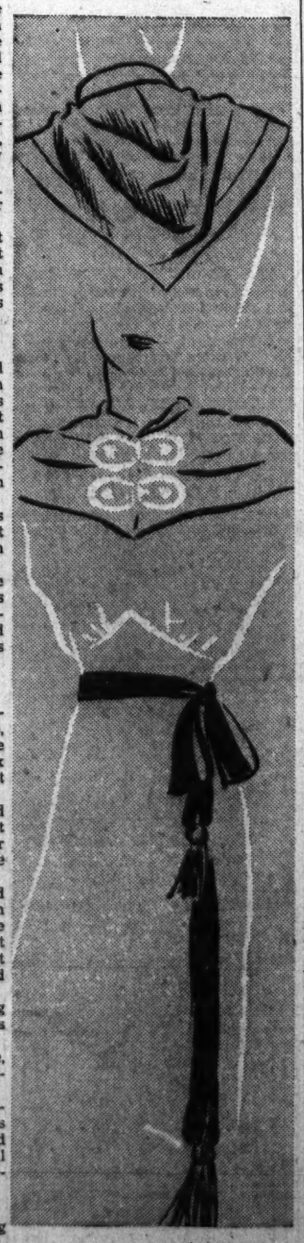
Death Ends Romance.

With grandchildren around them Chief Justice and Mrs. Taft must have looked back on their lives together and their romance and rejoiced in what life had brought to them. Their devotion to one another was proverbial and their home on Wyoming avenue northwest, spacious and full of mementoes of their interesting careers, another realization of their dreams.

It was in the winter of 1930 that Chief Justice Taft began to fail in health. He was taken to Asheville, N. C., his faithful wife by his side, but in vain. While the Nation watched in sorrow, the end came, and the earthly years of the romance between William Howard Taft and Helen Herron Taft were over, on March 8, 1930, when he died.

Ecclesiastical Aspect Features New Styles, Extending to Even Gayest About-Town Modes

By Amos Parrish.



New York, Feb. 4.—The more churchly you look the more fashion worldly you are . . . is one of the new fashion rules for spring. And call it a paradox if you like, the fact remains that many of the gayest about-town fashions have a cloistered look. (Or call it ecclesiastic, monastic, or even scholastic, since many church and university robes have similar details.)

Monks, nuns, friars, bishops . . . they've all lent something of their robes to your dresses and coats.

In some costumes it's just that loosely wrapped, muffled look that ecclesiastical robes have. But in others you'll find definite details lifted almost bodily from the robes to the dresses.

Cowl Necklines.

For example, there's the cowl neckline . . . a neckline with which you're familiar because Vionnet has used it so much in her dresses. But this spring it's more cowl-like than ever . . . draped, as you see in the lower right illustration, almost exactly as the tops of the robes worn by medieval monks and scholars.

You'll find this draping on dresses and occasionally the cape of a coat will be draped across the front in the same way.

This sketch also shows you the long tie girdle which many dresses wear and which is the modern version of the rope girdle which held together the loosely hung garments of medieval friars.

Monks' Hoods.

The medieval monk's hood appears on both dresses and coats, too, and you can see one type of the modern fashion on the coat back sketched just above the dress at the right.

Evening wraps also use this hood back and it is often arranged so it can be drawn up over the head for protection when motoring to the place of festivity.

Over at the top of the left hand sketch column is a bib effect—much like the stiff white you see on the robes of nuns. It is a development of the medieval wimple . . . that cloth wrapping which went round the neck and up over the head.

This is a fashion which young folk like on their dresses. It's crisp, peppy and youthful.

Below this is the bishop sleeve, another detail lifted bodily from ecclesiastical robes.

And you'll notice as you spring-shop that the bodices and sleeves of many new dresses are decorated with unpressed pleats, a detail found in both scholastic and ecclesiastic robes.

(Copyright, 1934, by Amos Parrish.)

Tomorrow: Clothes for the spring baby.

Dresses with the type of necklines described are available in Washington in all the better class shops and department stores.

Proposal May Be Man's Job But These Coeds Would Aid

Girls at Marquette Reveal How They Would Assist the Timid.

Milwaukee, Wis., Feb. 4 (AP).—Proposing marriage is a man's job, Marquette university coeds believe—but a few would cast aside romantic tradition to do the asking themselves if financial reasons kept their boy friends from bidding in the marital market.

And more than one coed frankly admitted she would use all her feminine wiles to "lead him up to popping the question" if timidity numbed his vocal cords.

Fear of being reminded of it would prevent Dorothy Cunningham, junior liberal arts student, from proposing, she says. "I'd never propose because all our life he'd hold it against me—or at least always be able to 'kid' me about it. Besides, I never would be sure he really wanted me—I'd always feel he couldn't say 'no' to a woman."

If finances alone stood in the way, Dorothy Campbell, senior journalist, would say the word. "I would propose only under those circumstances. No other concession would be made."

"Why should a woman do the dirty work? That's the man's job," was, in substance, the way three others put it, expressing their faith in "man should plea on banded knee."

Dorothy Winding and another Dorothy Cunningham, senior journalists, both believe they could bring about the bald stroke by resorting to "charm." Miss Winding would "be subtle and lead him up to it." Miss Cunningham would do all in her power to help him, "but he'd have to pop the question."

A man's timidity would never keep Betty Kroesing, senior journalist, an old maid, she vows. "If he was too timid to speak up, and I knew he really loved me, I'd propose," she says.

The view of Margaret Murphy, junior in arts, indicates that women are by no means immune to shyness.

"I'd like to propose," she says laughingly, "but every time I'd get close to it I'd get cold feet."

36 Historic Volumes Given To St. John's of Annapolis

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 4 (AP). Thirty-six massive volumes, their pages yellowed by time, containing articles by French thinkers whose ideas influenced the American Revolution and the Constitution, today rest on the library shelves at St. John's College, the gift of a friend of the institution.

The books, a complete set of the "Grande Encyclopedie," great French reference work of the eighteenth century, are believed at one time to have been in the library of Catherine the Great of Russia. They contain a bookplate with the imperial arms of Russia.

"The work, more than any one document, marks the division line between the old forms of thought and modern thought," said Dr. Douglas Huntly Gordon, president of the college.

"The volumes embody the important thought of the eighteenth century philosophers. One of the volumes, made up of documents and manuscripts, contain articles thought to have disappeared forever and fill well-known gaps in the history of eighteenth century thought."

Denis Diderot, eighteenth century playwright, writer and philosopher, worked for 25 years on the encyclopedia. The volumes presented the college are thought to be his copy, as Catherine the Great is known to have paid Diderot 50,000 livres for his entire library.

She also made him her librarian for life, paid his salary for 40 years in advance, at 1,000 livres a year and did not take possession of his library until his death.

The books, all full folio size, are bound in full red Levant Morocco leather, emblazoned with a coat of arms, thought to be those of Baron Holbach, patron of the encyclopedists.

There were 2,000 subscribers before the work of printing started in 1751 and 4,000 before the final volume was printed about 1780. The only other copy bound in morrocco with arms, is in the Baron de Rothschild Library in Paris.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

The Cause of Dyspepsia.

The most common cause of all disorders is that which usually goes by the name of dyspepsia. The reader may have heard this said of the common cold. The only contradiction there is arises out of the way the facts are stated. The common cold comes in attacks, and each one of these is counted. The dyspeptic has symtoms every day, and, in consequence, each attack is not counted.

Somewhere about every tenth adult has occasional symptoms of dyspepsia, and somewhere about every twentieth has some symptoms of it nearly every day.

The common understanding is that the seat of dyspepsia is the stomach. As a rule the symptoms are felt in the stomach or seem to originate there. But this is deceptive, since the seat of the trouble lies elsewhere, and the symptoms noted in the stomach are not as they appear as to location.

In gall bladder colic the average man thinks he feels the pain in his stomach. He is apt to have nausea. However, the stomach may be quite normal and the only disease he has is in his gall bladder.

Dyspepsia, so-called, may be due to something wrong in the spinal cord, as in the first stages of locomotor ataxia; to disease of the spinal column, to constipation, to adhesions, and to many other causes; but disturbance of the liver and the gall bladder overbalance all others. The trouble may be caused by gall stones, or there may be inflammation of the gall bladder without stones.

Attacks of gall stone colic are not necessary for a diagnosis of gall stones. Nor is a man who has had gall stones cured because he no longer has attacks of colic. The symptoms that go by the name gall stone colic are caused by obstruction in the ducts. Gall stones that for any reason do not obstruct the ducts at any time do not cause colic. If colic due to gall stones ceases to develop occasionally it is due to the fact that the ducts are no longer obstructed rather than to disappearance of the stones.

The fact that the chief cause of dyspepsia is the gall bladder and not the stomach does not mean that there is no dyspepsia. Even though the causes lie elsewhere, the stomach has trouble in doing its task and symptoms result. In fact, there is a definite type of dyspepsia known as gall bladder dyspepsia, often diagnosed as such. In this form of dyspepsia many of the symptoms proceed from the stomach. Attacks are apt to be precipitated by eating certain foods. Most cases of gall bladder dyspepsia can avoid attacks by careful dieting.

Sketch of Mayflower Is Given to President

President Roosevelt has just added to his notable collection of maritime art the original oil sketch from which was made the Haley Lever painting of the former Presidential yacht U. S. S. Mayflower.

The large canvas was presented to the late President Coolidge by the artist, an Australian painter of wide renown for his depiction of sea subjects. Aware of Mr. Roosevelt's deep interest in the sea the artist presented to him his original sketch through John W. Belt, of this city. Mr. Lever has canvasses in both the Corcoran and Phillips galleries here.

Nervous?

Here is a medicine which quiets quivering nerves. . . . You eat better . . . sleep better. 98 out of 100 women say — "It helps me."

"Before my baby was born I was run-down and nervous. My mother told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to ease my nerves and prepare me for childbirth. After only a few bottles I was up and doing my work cheerfully. Childbirth was very easy, thanks to your medicine".—Mrs. John Ellis, 6308 So. Campbell Ave., Chicago, Illinois.

"For five years I suffered terribly with headache and backache and was so nervous I would have to go to bed. I took different medicines but with no results until a friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking four bottles I am a different woman. I only wish I had started on it when I first had my troubles."—Mrs. H. B. Lasby, 202 N. 34th St., Louisville, Kentucky.

Gov. Ritchie At Cathedral Flag Service

Maryland Banner Given Washington Church by Colonial Dames.

Former Senator Blair Lee Lauds Tolerance of State.

The flag of Maryland was presented to Washington Cathedral yesterday in memory of Queen Anne of England and her "loving kindnesses" to the parishes of the Episcopal Church in that State during colonial days, by Chapter No. 1, Colonial Dames of America, of Baltimore.

Gov. Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland participated in the colorful flag presentation in the Great Choir and Sanctuary at the evensong service commemorating the Maryland tercentenary and the anniversary of the forming of the Diocese of Maryland.

The Governor handed the Maryland flag to the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, who officially received it for the cathedral. The presentation sentences were said by Mrs. Miles White, president of Chapter No. 1, Colonial Dames of America.

Gov. Ritchie was accompanied to Washington by three of his military aids, Col. Washington Bowie, Fifth Maryland Infantry; Col. Beverly Ober, 110th Field Artillery, and Lieut. Col. Herbert R. Grymes, Twenty-ninth Division staff.

Flag in Triforium Gallery.

The beautiful flag, after the service, was placed beside 15 other State flags in the Triforium gallery of the great choir and sanctuary. More than 60 members of Chapter 1, Colonial Dames of America; Maryland dignitaries, Maryland clergy and members of the National Women's Committee of Washington Cathedral in Maryland witnessed the presentation.

An address, "Maryland's Contribution to Church and State," was given by former United States Senator Blair Lee, of Silver Spring. The service was conducted by the Very Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, dean of Washington, assisted by other members of the Cathedral staff, including the Rev. Dr. William L. DeVries, the Rev. G. Freeland Peter and Canon Raymond L. Wolven.

The service of presentation and acceptance included special prayers in dedicating the flag and commemorating the achievements of church and State in that commonwealth since its founding.

In his address former Senator Lee pointed out that the flag of Maryland is an emblem of religious toleration, first established in Maryland by the Calverts, and it is "this record that seems to be without parallel in the history of human experience up to the founding of Maryland."

"Tolerance is the spiritual badge of the Christian and good evidence of confidence in his faith," he said.

Early History Lauded.

Commenting on the early history of the Church of England in Maryland, Senator Lee said "The Church of England was the established Church in Maryland. In 1720, there were 38 parishes, supported by a tax of 40 pounds of tobacco upon each male inhabitant. When the Revolution set in two-thirds of the clergy were royalists and left the province.

The influence of the church was ever great in Maryland. After the Revolution is became the Protestant Episcopal Church and the glebe lands and other property were given to vestries, or corporations of laymen, presided over by rectors in each parish.

Under this charter in Maryland, the act of 1798, no dogmatic submission meets any man at the door of the church who asks admission. All are enrolled who desire membership and will unite in its support. This toleration is without parallel in church government and puts the church upon an American basis, the great change wrought by its American experience.

"Since the Revolution this church has grown to three dioceses, Maryland, Easton and Washington, with 289 parishes and missions," he said.

At the conclusion of the service Gov. Ritchie and his party, as well as many of the Maryland visitors, were taken on a pilgrimage through the Cathedral Close to see the many objects of religious devotion and interest on Mount St. Alban. In the Bethlehem Chapel of the Nativity the governor was shown the tomb of President Woodrow Wilson, who is buried there.

Capital News Guild Elects, Adopts Laws

De Souza Made President; Membership of 120 Is Announced.

The Washington Newspaper Guild yesterday in the National Press Club auditorium adopted a local constitution and elected officers to serve until after the next convention of the American Newspaper Guild in June.

D. A. deSouza, of the Evening Star, was elected president by unanimous vote. O. B. Troup, of the Herald, and George E. Durno, of the International News Service, were elected first and second vice presidents, respectively; J. D. Secrest of The Washington Post, secretary, and Charles Swartz, of the Washington Times, treasurer.

The treasurer reported the local guild now has 120 paid members. The guild postponed election of six members of an exectuive committee to serve with the officers until the next meeting, the date for which will be announced this week.

Federal Labor Coordination Plan Is Urged

Miss Perkins Says Need for Law Uniformity Is Pressing.

(Associated Press.)

Secretary Perkins of the Labor Department believes the Government should set up a clearing house of information on recovery processes.

The Secretary told the House subcommittee on appropriations that activities of economic recovery had placed new duties on her department.

She pointed to the proposed Bureau of Labor Standards and Service to put the Labor Department at the service of States wishing to study their labor laws and assist them in bringing their laws into harmony.

"We can do a great deal for very little expenditure," she explained, "if we have within the department a rallying point, an activity and a personnel sufficient to keep all these cooperative forces in line and working together for the achievement of the result, which is to have all of the work places of the United States of America, in whatever State they may be located, safe for the people who work in them."

Workers' education she cited as "another great new problem," with the department's function "to put into a realistic relationship to this program the people who are going to be exposed to the education," including improvement of community life and opportunity for wage earners such as improved housing for workers as well as recreational and health facilities.

"The working people themselves should be involved in the planning for workers' housing," she said, "and they should have something to say about what kind of a house they want, how much they will pay for it, the location in which they want it, and the way in which they live."

Miss Perkins told of the need of stabilizatoin of employment and income both for labor and for industry, "the technique of insurance either by States or by the Federal Government or by industries against the depredations of a long period of unemployment."

The Labor Secretary reported more rapid progress than had been expected was being made with the employment service in her department under the Wagner-Peyster act, designed as a Federal-State clearing medium for correlating workers and jobs in different sections.

She explained that the NRA and organized labor both had turned to the Labor Department constantly in the formulation of their codes.

Gray Veterans Present Flags To Daughters of Confederacy

Headquarters Abandoned by Gibbons Camp at Harrisonburg.

Harrisonburg, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.). The Gray ranks have so thinned in Rockingham that the once active S. B. Gibbons Camp, United Confederate Veterans, has abandoned its quarters and turned over its treasured possessions to the Turner Ashby Chapter, Daughters of the Confederacy.

The presentation was made at the February meeting of the Daughters chapter. Gifts included prized flags behind which the veterans once marched and photographs taken at State and Southern reunions.

Another presentation was a picture of Gen. Robert Mason Colvin, last commander of S. B. Gibbons Camp and State commander of the Sons of Confederate Veterans. It was largely through Gen. Colvin's efforts that the post here was kept alive as long as it was.

As the veterans became too old to continue Gen. Colvin turned his efforts to the Sons of Confederate Veterans. He built up the Banner Sons division in the South and received the coveted honor flag at the last reunion at Richmond. The D. H. Lee Martz Camp, Sons of Veterans, of Harrisonburg, was revived by Gen. Colvin and now is one of the most active in the State.

There are 14 Confederate veterans in Rockingham. At the Lee-Jackson Day exercises here last month only four were able to attend. Their ages ranged from 86 to 102.

CCC Automotive Contracts Awarded

Fechner Stresses Benefit of Work on Industry.

Purchase of trucks and other heavy machinery for the Civilian Conservation Corps has been a stimulating factor in the improvement of the automotive industry, Robert Fechner, director of the emergency conservation work, said yesterday, after announcing award of new contracts by the Department of the Interior.

The Chevrolet Motor Co. of Detroit was given a contract for 326 trucks for $187,942.48. The Northwest Motor Co. of Washington, Ford dealers, received orders for 156 trucks and 60 passenger cars for $108,749.70.

Since April 5, 1933, trucks purchased for the CCC total 14,179. Other items purchased include 659 tractors, 760 automobiles and ambulances, 580 tractor trail builders, 644 graders and 74 compressors.

Rev. Johnson Opposes U. S. Aid to Schools

Catholic Leader Points to Dangers for Future in Proposed Program.

Opposition to Federal aid in education, as proposed by leading educators in a recent recommendation to Congress, was voiced yesterday by the Rev. George Johnson, Ph. D., of the department of education of the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

"I am not convinced by the evidence so far presented that such aid is necessary, and feel that from the point of view of the future of American education it is unwise," Dr. Johnson said.

In the event that legislation is enacted through the campaign of the Federal committee on the Emergency in Education, Dr. Johnson recommended that it be given in the form of a special provision in the relief act, rather than a separate Federal appropriation.

Opposes Federal Control.

The allotment, he recommended also, should be made in such a manner as to preclude all possibility of Federal control.

"There should be nothing in the language or spirit of the legislation," he said, "to prevent States from allowing privately supported schools, not maintained for profit, conducted in accord with respectable education standards, and hence public to all intents and purposes, to participate in the Federal grants, if they make application for such participation.

"The aid," Dr. Johnson added, "should not be limited to public schools now supported by public taxation."

Dr. Johnson pointed out that a considerable amount of aid is being given education under the recovery program through the Public Works Administration and the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

Favors U. S Aid "At Discretion."

The Catholic educator commended the suggestion of distributing education funds at the discretion of the Federal Government. Through this system, he pointed out, funds might be withheld from States that are making no effort in the direction of larger units for administration, or from States that refuse to put educational support on a sounder basis by changing their tax lawss.

"If there is something radically wrong with our schools," he said, "and the system under which they operate, the granting of Federal funds might easily amount to merely throwing good money after bad and consequently perpetuating the condition that has created the emergency."

In Reverse

Burglar Stays in, Then Breaks Out.

Maybe he will be fined by the B. P. U. (Burglars Protective Union) for procedure contrary to traditions. Anyway, a thief reversed operations early yesterday to loot the cash register of a drug store at 728 F street northeast.

Instead of breaking into the store, he pocketed $25 and smashed his way out. Just before closing time, the intruder apparently secreted himself in a telephone booth.

He looted the cash drawer, then found all doors locked and escape blocked. Only slightly nonplussed, he acted quickly and in best burglar fashion ripped the lock from a rear door.

Fascist Guard Warns Dollfuss To Keep Pledge

Break With Politicians or Lose Support, Ultimatum.

Innsbruck, Austria, Feb. 4 (AP). An ultimatum to Chancellor Dollfuss that he must break with "party politicians now surrounding him" or lose support of the powerful Fascist Heimwehr (Home Guard) was delivered at a Heimwehr mass meeting today.

In strong speeches Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, Heimwehr leader, and Richard Steidle, federal commissar of propaganda, notified the chancellor frankly that he must change his course toward his party.

Both pointed out that Dollfuss several months ago had pledged himself to end "once and for all the rule of political parties in Austria" and they emphatically declared the time had come for that pledge to be kept.

The speakers asserted the Heimwehr was not questioning the loyalty or good faith of Dollfuss, but demanding that officials who prevented him from keeping his pledges be removed.

"We have the quaint habit when someone makes us a promise we expect him to keep it," said Steidle, a leader of the Tyrolese Heimwehr.

"Dollfuss said on September 21 that the time for rule by parties is over, but Chairman Czermak of the Christian Social (Dollfuss') party says Austria's future is in the Christian Social party. If Czermak is right, the Heimwehr no longer belongs to the Dollfuss front."

A strong drive against Nazis has been launched by the Home Guard, which last Sunday was counseled by Starhemberg to "take the law into your own hands."

Starhemberg told his followers that he not only approved the demand for dissolution of the Socialist Christian Social parties in the Tyrol, but declared if the chancellor did not quickly show he really means to crush Marxism "then I no longer can guarantee the Heimwehr will continue to support Dollfuss."

Assailant Is Injured By Victim of Holdup

A colored footpad will think twice before he attacks John Robinson, of 1614 Tenth street northwest, again. Robinson told police he was walking near his home early yesterday, when a youth approached, produced a knife and demanded money. After taking $4, the knife-wielder turned to flee.

Robinson picked up a length of iron pipe lying on the sidewalk and hurled it at his assailant. The fleeing youth was struck on the back of the head, Robinson said, but continued on his way. Police followed a trail of blood for several blocks.

Recent Upturn In Construction Laid to PWA

Ickes Points Out Benefits to Building Trades Industries.

The Public Works program will prove exceptionally beneficial to the distressed building trades industries, Secretary of the Interior Ickes asserted yesterday on the basis of a survey compiled by the F. W. Dodge Corporation, building statistics agency.

The survey covered building in 37 States east of the Rocky Mountains. It declared that "the construction industry, sickest of all sick industries a year ago, is very decidedly convalescent; it has many reasons for viewing the year 1934 with renewed hope and vigor."

Recent increases in construction it attributed chiefly to PWA. This, it added, "is likely to continue as the largest factor through 1934.

"The spread of purchasing power through public construction expenditures will have some effect on business confidence, real estate conditions and willingness to invest in new projects. The public works program has not only provided money to carry through many hundreds of millions of dollars of construction work, but it has also stimulated planning of many additional projects."

Noting that 1933 was the lowest point of the depression for construction, the report said progress since that low point was reached has been remarkable.

"Consequently," it pointed out, "the outlook for 1934 is vastly improved; naturally this improvement is to be measured in terms of upturn from depression levels, not in terms of approximating the volumes of previous boom years."

1,000 Jobless Will Besiege White House

"You Don't Dare Cut Off CWA Jobs," Is Word for President.

Benjamin Coaches Body on What to Demand of New Deal.

Delegates from unemployed councils of 32 States will call this morning on President Roosevelt, Secretary of Labor Perkins and Federal Relief Administrator Hopkins in an effort to enlist aid for relief of jobless workers.

With 1,000 delegates attending the meeting yesterday of the National Convention of Unemployed Councils in the Masonic Temple, Tenth and U streets northwest, Herbert Benjamin, organizer of the councils, addressed the gathering on the workers' unemployment insurance bill and how to fight for its enactment.

Bill Is Pending.

The bill, introduced in the House by Representative Ernest Lundeen, of Minnesota, provides unemployment insurance for all workers against loss of earnings, supported by Federal funds.

Benjamin told the meeting that all Governmental agencies have failed in the attempt to cope with unemployment. The ruling classes must be forced to accept the solution offered by workers, he said.

He predicted that as long as capitalism lasts there will be millions of workers unemployed with no way of obtaining work. The problem can be solved through unemployment insurance by forcing the Government to institute a system of compensation for workers who lose their jobs.

Tells What to Say.

"If the Government can afford billions for war," Benjamin said, "it can afford unemployment insurance. We are meeting to force them to do it."

Speaking for many CWA workers attending the convention, Benjamin told them they should tell the President: "You don't dare to cut off the CWA jobs."

Jane Langton, of Columbus, Ohio, a delegate of the unemployment council in that city, called the NRA the "National Robbery Association." Boos and catcalls greeted her mention of President Roosevelt as the greatest leader the Nation has had in years.

Cincinnati Reds Sold to Group Headed by Crosley, Radio Magnate

New Owners Keep Terms Private

MacPhail, General Manager, Lieut. Governor of Ohio Part Owners.

Club Is Bought From Bank; New Deal Is Promised.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Feb. 4 (AP).—Purchase of the Cincinnati Reds Baseball Club of the National League by a syndicate headed by Powel Crosley, jr., wealthy Cincinnati manufacturer and sportsman, was announced today. The club was obtained from the Central Trust Co., a Cincinnati bank.

Crosley, the announcement said, will be president of the club. Associated with him in the syndicate are Larry MacPhail, now general manager of the club, and Charles L. Sawyer, of Cincinnati, Lieutenant Governor of Ohio and prospective candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor.

The amount involved in the transfer or the terms were not revealed.

Trust Company Owner.

MacPhail, former president of the Columbus American Association Baseball Club, came here three months ago. Only with the announcement today has come confirmation of rumors that the Central Trust Co. had been the actual owner of the Cincinnati club, in return for financial assistance given Sidney Weil, who resigned as president when MacPhail took charge.

Weil shortly afterward filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy listing liabilities of almost a million dollars and assets of only $250.

Announcement of the switch in control of the club, bringing to it ample financial backing at last, came from MacPhail, climaxing three months of hard work in which he built the club up by trades to an aggregation Cincinnati is ready to hail as a contender in the league, rather than a seemingly perpetual tail-ender.

"The condition of the Cincinnati club necessitated a thorough financial reorganization to provide additional working capital," MacPhail said. "I believe it was essential that the Reds be owned and controlled in Cincinnati by Cincinnatians.

Sees Service for City.

"Mr. Crosley was convinced that the Reds perform a definite service for the city, and on this account has agreed to make an investment in and accept the presidency of the club.

"The reorganization will make it possible for the Reds to function as an aggressive member of the National League. I am happy with the set-up and with our prospects."

Crosley himself, in a telephoned statement from his winter home at Sarasota, Fla., commented that MacPhail "has built an efficient organization and has strengthened the club's playing strength in a hurry. I am sure we can make a success of the venture.

He will, he revealed, begin functioning in his new office at once, planning to fly north from Florida to join MacPhail in New York for the National League meeting opening there Tuesday. What plans he and others of the syndicate may have likely will be revealed there, it was indicated.

Forty-seven years old, Crosley has had a spectacular career. Originally an advertising copywriter, and once an automobile salesman, he became interested in radio in its early days, became a manufacturer of receivers, established his own broadcasting station and for a time was his own station staff, doing the announcing himself. Throughout his rise to wealth he retained an interest in sports. A pitcher and football player in his college days here, he is known now as an enthusiastic aviator, horseman, yachtsman, and hunter.

Foot Race Footnotes

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4 (Spl.).—There were some running races in our village the other Saturday evening that had some fair to middling excitement to them, but I thought that the real contest of the meet was the struggle between the athletes and the officials. A young high jumper from Fresno, Calif., named Marty, had to knock two or three boiled shirts out of his way every time he ran for the bar, which handicap, I imagine, rather hindered him from setting a new world's indoor high-jump record.

There were more officials in dinner suits and hard hats on the floor than there were athletes. They all wore gold badges and had themselves a time of it ordering the kids around, chasing them from places where they were into places where they didn't want to be and generally making a nuisance of themselves.

The meet was a failure as far as I was concerned because there was no shot put. When there is a shotput you can always sit and hope that the cannonball will bean one of the badge wearers.

The track meet was that of the Millrose A. A., the snootiest of the indoor foot-race promoters and the most difficult to get along with. The show is always a sell out, and people who have sell-outs are not inclined to be friendly to the press because of sheer affection for the Fourth Estate.

However, I doubt whether the Millrose people were responsible for the terrific slew of officials who cluttered up the arena. Brother, I want to tell you it's just hell to be in the presence of so many hard hats and not have available a snowball or a brick. Does it affect you that way too? Or is it just a low form of degeneracy?

The great mile duel between Venzke and Cunningham was a dud, because apparently any time the big thoroughbred from Kansas sticks a spike into a board track, Venzke is just a guy who runs second. Gee, mister, that Cunningham is a pretty piece of guy to watch. He reminds you of nothing so much as a finely bred race horse. He comes out onto the track to open his pipes and breezes around the oval raising and lowering his head like a pony, sniffing the air, and then breaking into mincing little trotting steps. I was afraid that he was going to leave his race in those practice spins, he ran so many of them and kept his feet so long before the show.

But I guess he is a very strongly built young man, that Cunningham, and why Venzke ever permits him to run at his elbow is more than I can see. I would want HIM ahead of me where I could watch him. When Cunningham moved around him, Venzke apparently just had to let him go.

I sat in front of and beyond the finish line so that the tired runners were always coming toward me. After a while the tortured young faces begin to depress you a little. As the races near their end you can see the torture beginning as the kids fight for breath and against the poisons of fatigue. They age before your eyes and when they finish it is as old men whose span of life has been run, their faces lined and twisted and torn. That is one thing I seem to remember about Bill Carr, the great Pennsylvania runner, and Cunningham, too. So fine was their form and their judgment of pace that they rarely had to go all out.

Before the great mile run a lot of the college kids in their gay-colored sweat suits were sitting in the infield watching the show. They were nowhere near the track. An official in a waiter suit and gold badge came over and shooed them away like a coppeer chasing a bunch of tramps off his beat. If it weren't for those youngsters the officials would never get a chance to parade before 17,000 people. Is it then so hard to show courtesy when a badge is pinned to the lapel?

We were all pulling for one of the kids to slap him down. For a moment I thought that George Spitz, the great N. Y. U. high jumper, was going to take a poke at him. We were all rooting for him. Just one. But nothing happened. For a moment it looked as though one of the pole vault standards might fall over onto a group of officials who were huddled together arguing over how many seconds there are in a minute, and mash their hard hats. There was a hushed and reverent silence, but some idiot caught it and prevented it from reaching them. I tell you, it was just an evening of disappointments.

The college relays were simply swell. There were more of them than ever before and the races were all grand, the lead changing four or five times during the course of the mile. It is a superb sight to see those fine youngsters in the bright-colored shirts with the insignias of their colleges on their breasts fighting one another off around the turns, taking up forlorn chances and sometimes by magnificent efforts snatching victory from defeat.

These college relay races more than any other track event seem to come close to the old days of knightly sport. The batons that the youngsters carry become the guerdons and standards of battle. There were relay teams there from all over the country. What a fine show these college athletes make up. And when will the badgers realize that the customers come to see the kids and not the officials?

Tomorrow night the corporation will stage its postponed 15-round light-heavyweight championship match between Maxey Rosenbloom and Joe Knight at Miami, and on Friday at New York offers King Levinsky in the first match of a series the Gardens hopes will develop him into the status of outstanding contender for heavyweight champion Primo Carnera.

Favorite at 6 to 5.

Rosenbloom, veteran champion of the 175-pounders, was to have met Knight, his Cairo, Ga., challenger, at Miami last Thursday night, but inclement weather forced a postponement. The champion still rules the favorites at 6 to 5, although the southpaw Southerner beat him in their only previous meeting.

Levinksky, being groomed by the Garden for a possible Carnera fatch, will face the Pittsburgh heavyweight, Charley Massera, at the Garden here. Although Massera is one of the most promising of the younger crop of heavies, Levinsky will rule a strong favorite.

Young Corbett Returns.

Otherwise the National program is marked by the first step in a comeback campaign by Young Corbet 3d, former welterweight champion. He will meet Babe Marino, San Francisco middleweight, at San Francisco tomorrow night.

In 1933, the Woodstock eleven claimed the State championship in the 155-pound class.

N. C. Tops Conference Pack; Terps Drop Into Fourth Place

Tarheels Impressive in Victories Over Virginia, Duke and Maryland; Blue Devils Play in Three Games on Card This Week.

RICHMOND, Va., Feb. 4 (AP). North Carolina's victory banner, tattered somewhat after three courageous battles with stout foes, flew high at Chapel Hill today, waving the Tarheels' defiance to all Southern Conference basket ball contenders.

Maryland's Old Liners felt the fury of the Carolina attack and dropped from the league leadership to fourth position and Duke's Blue Devils, another championship contender, took a licking last night and dropped into fifth place.

It was a cellarite—the tough-luck Cavaliers of Virginia—who gave the White Phantoms their worst scare of the week. Leading into the final minute after a brilliant duel wit hthe Phantoms, the Virginians were slapped resoundingly in the face by Dame Fortune. A Cavalier player lost his balance under the Tarheel basket, the ball shot from his hands and Stuart Aitken, alert Carolina forward, tossed it through the hoop for the two-pointer that gave the Phantoms a 24-to-23 victory.

Blue Devils Beaten.

Maryland fell the following evening, 28 to 24, and last night the Phantoms, off to an early lead, paced the Blue Devils all the way to win, 25 to 21. Three times in the torrid second half the visitors pulled up to within a poin of their fast-moving rivals, but the Phantoms were always one step ahead.

South Carolina's Gamecocks who won their only conference tilt with Clemson early in the season were technically in the lead, but North Carolina's more impressive record gave it the chief claim to laurels at this stage of the game.

N. C. State's Wolfpack, the only team in the league that has been good enough to whip the phantoms, defeated Washington and Lee, 30 to 17, and, profiting by Maryland's tumble, slipped into third position. The Generals were more impressive against Duke the following evening, but lost an exciting one, 41 to 37.

Victory was sweet to Virginia Tech's Gobblers who, after losing nine games in a row, five of them to conference rivals, outpointed their ancient rivals of V. M. I. last night, 22 to 19.

Duke's devils, still in the race that won't be decided until the conference tournament at Raleigh, will participate in half of the six games on this week's card. Their road trip will carry them to Lynchburg tomorrow night to play Washington and Lee, to Lexington the following evening to meet Virginia Military and Wednesday night to Blacksburg, where they will play Virginia Tech.

Terps Face Cavaliers.

Maryland, attempting a comeback, Tuesday will entertain a Cavalier eleven that was whipped decisively in an earlier meeting. Other conference games on the card will pit Washington and Lee against Virginia Tech at Lexington Thursday and V. P. I. against Virginia at Lynchburg Saturday.

The standings of Southern Conference teams follows:

	W.	L.	Pct.	Pts.	Opp.'s pts.
South Carolina	1	0	1.000	41	15
North Carolina	10	1	.909	371	251

Winchester, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.). Middlebrook High School, of Augusta County, near Staunton, won the Future Farmers of America basket ball championship for northern Virginia in Handley High School here. To clinch the title the Middlebrook five defeated Upperville High School, 37 to 10.

8th Straight Annexed by Heurichs

Reds Rally to Defeat New York Quintet in 27-21 Game.

CHALK up the eighth straight win for the undefeated Heurich Reds, who thumped out a last-half win over the strong De Sota K. of C. basket ball team of New York City, 27-21.

Starting the game with only five players on hand and finishing up the fracas with the same five, the leg-weary Reds turned certain defeat into a winning classic, that had the sparsely settled outlay of customers in a frenzy.

Brilliant shooting by Ralph Bennie, Moon Evans and Bozey Berger, in the last 20 minutes of the fray, snatched the game from certain defeat and changed it into a possible rout, had the game progressed another five minutes.

Sharpshooters Stopped.

Those Dead-Eye Dicks, Ed Kelly and Bill Dorsey, were held to fairly low scoring, after the half-way mark was reached. But in the first stage of the ball game, everything was entirely different. The Reds showed anything but a keen sense of basket ball play. Easy pot-shots failed to come close to the hoop and the half ended with the Manhattan Knights leading, 10-6.

Numerous fouls marred the play, but both teams failed to materialize a count on the charity flings. Five minutes after the opening stanza, Kelly and Dorsey advanced the score for the Mazda lads, 4 to 0, but Bennie and Duke Croson soon tied up the count at 4-all.

At the start of the second half the Heurich Reds really started to act like a real ball club. Croson flipped the team into the lead, 11 to 10, but a few moments later the Knights came through to knot the count at 13-up.

Berger Gets Started.

It was the last time that the New York five showed its serious scoring guns. Berger opened up his silent flips at that point, which not only knock-kneed the visiting gentry, but doubled up the local rooters in a wild knot. One, two, three, four they came through the air, these shots, from the center of the floor, and failed even to finger the dangling cords about the basket as they swished through the hoops. It was all over but the timekeeper's whistle and that pierced the din three minutes later.

In the preliminary affair the Heurich Flashes bowled over the Katzman Tailors, 34 to 24. Jimmy Cavanaugh, late of the Roosevelt High School quintet, was high scorer of the meet, registering 12 points on five field goals and a brace of charity flings.

Sholl's Wins 73d in Row, Pressed

Capital "Wonder" Team Barely Beats Baltimore Five, 25-22.

Stonewall Club Leading, 16-15, After Splurge of 2d Half Scoring.

DISPLAYING a gilt-edge brand of passing and shooting, Sholl's maintained its record-breaking pace yesterday at the Washington Boys Club by defeating the high-powered Stonewall Democratic Club team, of Baltimore, 25 to 22, in a game into which the real thrills were crowded in the last 15 minutes of play.

The triumph was the seventy-third in a row for the District A. A. U. unlimited champions, who were forced to unravel their finest basketball before beating off the invaders' challenge in the dying minutes of the battle.

Off to a flying start when Bernie Jones made a free throw, the Sholl's cagers whirled into an 8-3 lead after 10 minutes of play, and protected their advantage at half time, when they led by 14-6. During this period, the Sholl's players collaborated beautifully in a fast-breaking offense, with Carroll Shore, guard, and Jones, forward, doing the bulk of the shooting.

Baltimoreans Rally.

In the closing period, the Baltimore crew, sensing defeat, bounded back into form. After Sammy Hook caged a field goal to bring the count to 16-6, the visitors fought back, and delivered their answer in the form of a whirlwind passing assault and a volley of goals pumped in by Feldman and Hauser. Steadily Stonewall enhanced its score, until it was pushed up to 16-15. Then followed the point-for-point struggle. With the count 22-20 in favor of Sholl's, and 4 minutes before whistle time, Jones deposited two foul shots.

Meanwhile Snitz Snyder, South Atlantic boxing champion, not to be confused with the Maryland star by the same name, who was playing a roving game in the second half, was banished on personal fouls, and much of the visitors' strength went with his departure. From the middle of the floor Knell, of Stonewall, looped in a basket to bring the score to 24-22, but Robey, of Sholl's, converted a free throw into the final point and, with 30 seconds to play, the District team took possession of the ball and "froze" it.

Jones, with 7 points, led in the scoring.

In the curtain-raiser, Boys' Club varsity won handily from the Frederick, Md., "Y," 40 to 15. Every man on the Boys' Club team scored a point or more, as Coach Eddie Bratburd used two complete teams in completing the rout.

Kennedy Confident of Upsetting Gallagher in Portner's Feature Tomorrow

Coast Heavy Likes Being Underdog

Record Is Studded With Surprise Wins Over Favorites.

10-Round Route, Longer Than Last Meeting, Just Suits.

QUIETLY confident, Les Kennedy, the California Rambler, is unostentatively engaged in the arduous business of getting in shape for his ten-round bout with Marty Gallagher at Portner's tomorrow night. Apparently thoroughly convinced that he will outbox, out-think and out-hit the Foggy Bottom fisticuffer, Kennedy is seemingly unperturbed by reports of Gallagher's superb physical condition and secretly a little pleased at being made the underdog in prefight predictions.

"Over the ten-round route I should take Gallagher like Hepburn took Hollywood," opines the battle-scarred erstwhile copper miner between fast sessions in the gymnasium. "I was making him look like a monkey in the last few rounds of our eight-round bout last year. If I'd had two more rounds to work in then, I would have won easily. All this 'experting' which has me beat before the fight starts is a lot of bunk. I'd rather go in the ring on the bottom—every time I have done so around here I've won, haven't I?"

Kennedy Noted for Upsets.

The very fact that Kennedy has an annoying habit of winning when least expected to is restraining the enthusiasm of some of the gambling gentry who might otherwise install him an overwhelming favorite. The memory of his upsets over Bob Godwin, Reds Barry and Stanley Poreda is too firmly embedded in the minds of most close followers of affairs fistic to allow them to concede Gallagher an overwhelming edge.

The big Californian is distinctly an in-and-outer, who is duck soup for any man's heavyweight one night and a near-champion the next. His 1933 record bears out the contention of those who claim you never can tell what he will do next. In January, just after handing the highly-regarded Bob Godwin a thorough going over, he journeyed to Charlotte, N. C., where the best he could get against Dewey Kimrey was a draw. Kimrey is the angular heavyweight who dropped before Gallagher at Portner's a few weeks ago.

Returning to Alexandria in February, Kennedy won easily from Reds Barry in 10 rounds, but in April he absorbed a sound trouncing from Arthur Huttick.

Poreda K. O. Surprise.

In June he startled the world of the squared circle by knocking out Stanley Poreda, who had a few months before decisioned Primo Carnera. Then followed a series of losing fights, which was broken by his recent win over Big Boy Rawson (or whatever his name was), who made everyone but himself miserable by sticking around the full distance and doing little else.

All of which may presage a return to top form which bodes ill for Mr. Gallagher. If such is the case, Kennedy has good reason for his quiet confidence.

A trio of six-rounders, featuring Charley von Reedon against Benny Adler, LeRoy Dougan opposed to Baby Charles and Patsy Wallace vs. Bobby Burns, will round out the bill.

A lucky shot for both sides was the one fired by a Turkish gunner during the World War at a British submarine patrolling enemy waters in the Dardanelles. Although they had nothing to shoot at but the almost invisible periscope, the Turks put a single shot directly through it. The shot put the enemy ship out of commission so far as operations were concerned—but the submarine was able to return to its own base without losing a man.

The late Rev William R. Moon, retired Baptist minister, won fame throughout the East as the "marrying parson." He even had an electric sign announcing his specialty—marriages. Thousands of couples came to him from neighboring States when marriage laws across the State lines became more strict, and in one year, 1920, he performed 4,000 ceremonies. His grand total for 15 years was 25,000 couples married.

Two-headed trout are rare but a two-headed trout that lives any length of time is exceedingly rare The one illustrated above was hatched at the State hatchery at Mount Shasta, Calif. Contrary to expectations, it lived and thrived. It has two pair of eyes, mouth, &c. According to last reports the two-headed trout was five inches long, well, and apparently happy. Its big trouble is that each of its heads wants to do all the eating.

Hialeah Race Track, Feb. 4.

Dear Al:

Having seen nothing in the public print, I wish to report that J. E. Widener, the owner of this beautiful track, was severely shaken up in an auto accident returning from the park yesterday. I also wish to report, before it slips my mind, that the youthful Bennings had three winners yesterday. We had another bang-up crowd here yesterday. Miami and the surrounding burgs are filling up with winter vacationists and those who vacation the whole year round. A good many have been drawn by the Carnera-Loughran fight, so they would have me believe. However, I don't think anyone failed to come because the horses are here. I said it was a question of "when" with Traffic Judge. Yesterday happened to be "when." And that $61 mutuel was terrific.

BILL.

First race—Sun Apollo, a brother of Sun Beau, hasn't been to the races since last June. However, he has been giving the clockers an eye full and appears capable of escaping the maiden ranks in this. Zuzu Lad looks like the one to beat. Flint Shot for the show.

Second race—Polydeena gets the Bennings call in this on workouts. Clocker Mike tells me not to let this one get away. Gets in with only 104 pounds and may give the boys a surprise. Exhibit did well in that lone start. Query to take care of the others.

Third race—Eurydice won that last so easily that I can hardly look elsewhere to rthe main pay-off horse. If there is an upset, I look for Rego to turn th etrick. This one is on the improve. Barkantine could awake with a crash in a field of this sort.

Fourth race—Tomorrow seems to be a day of fast-trial horses. Here's another that I'm putting on top. I mean The Point. Showad sizzling speed the other morning and provided this can be transfered to actual racing we may get this fellow home at good odds. Irene's Bob and Fancy Flight for the other awards.

FIFTH RACE—TRIANGULAR, as I believe I warned you as far back as Bowie, is a much better colt than rated. Showed his worth down here by grabbing off a purse with an excellent effort. Asked to beat such as CHANCE FLIGHT and BROWN TONEY tomorrow, I believe it can be done.

SIXTH RACE—This is a very open race with ESCADRON figuring a trifle the best. At that there is some question as to his liking for this route. If the top one makes any mistakes, look for LAWLESS LADY with that light burden to take care of the major award. GRAYBACK is as tough as that Tropical victory.

SEVENTH RACE—HIS WAY was a fast-closing horse in that recent effort behind Waterway and Carbon. This looks like the spot. POLO BAR and HAGGERSON for the other places. If WELL BUILT wins there should be an investigation.

Duke Cagemen Will Invade Virginia

DURHAM, N. C., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—Duke University's cagers leave here tomorrow morning for a trio of important Southern Conference games in Virginia, opening tomorrow night with Washington and Lee in Lynchburg.

The Blue Devils will meet V. M. I. Tuesday night at Lexington, and V. P. I. Wednesday night at Blacksburg. The games with the Generals and the Cadets will be return engagements, but it will be the first meeting this season between the Blue Devils and the V. P. I. Gobblers.

Also Meet Wake Forest.

The coming week will be the last heavy week of firing for Coach Eddie Cameron's boys before the conference tournament in Raleigh. In addition to the three conference games, the Blue Devils meet Wake Forest in Raleigh Saturday night in a Big Five contest. After this week only four games remain on the Devil's pretournament card.

Their opening foe of the week tomorrow night—Washington and Lee—is likely to prove quite an assignment for the Blue Devils. Duke won by a 4-point margin in the meeting here last week after the lead had changed hands ten times in the closest game seen on the Duke floor this season. The Generals, led by Joe Sawyers, forward, have improved rapidly this season under the coaching of Cy Young.

Mrs. Max Baer Speaks

The former Mrs. Max Baer pictured with her former husband last year when it was reported that the Adonis of the ring was effecting a reconciliation with his divorced wife.

By Bill McCormick.

FOUND at last—one woman who doesn't think Maximillian Adelbert Baer is the answer to a maiden's prayer. Having been Mrs. Maximillian Adelbert Baer for some three years, Dorothy Dunbar, beauteous star of the galloping gelatine, here with the Moulin Rouge Caravan of celebrities, should speak with authority of the Romeo Ringster. Anyway, she speaks emphatically.

Suave, svelte and sophisticated, the titian-topped erstwhile better half of the Baer family admits that she once thought Makes-a-Million Adelbert the caviar in the canape, the ne plus ultra of the masculine sex, or in simple, very simple, English—the nuts. That was when she married him. Today it's a horse of another off-color and as far as she's concerned he's now washed up like th Los Angeles Stadium for a Rose Bowl Game. She advances a number of reasons for feeling as she does, namely, to wit:

1. The Great Cardiac Cleaver is perfectly wonderful as a suitor—but once he wins the objects of his wooings, he becomes indifferent, to say the least.

"Nobody could be sweeter than he is when he's courting you," says La Dunbar, looking prettily puzzled over the whole business. Some of the incidents in that picture, "Prize Fighter and the Lady," that he made were so near actual happenings in our married life that I often wonder how the authors found out about them—if they did.

"Time and time again I've forgiven him, but I'll never do it again. He's pestered me to take him back again since we were divorced, but that's out. Just before Christmas he called me long distance and tried to patch things up, but there isn't a chance."

2. When they split up he wanted back all the jewelry he had given her.

"He certainly did," emphasized the former Mrs. B., "and he wanted everything else he had given me."

3. His ultra-coyishness and naivete is mostly assumed. He is more sophisticated than most people his age—especially fighters.

"That kid stuff is mostly assumed," explains Miss Dunbar, referring to her third husband's youthful exuberance. "Max is long past the childhood stage, but it gets him publicity, so he sticks to it."

4. He acted like a spoiled baby in public,

"I put up with a lot of that being bawled out in front of friends or in crowds. The last time it happened Max made a scene before some eight or ten of his gentlemen friends—and I simply quit."

5. He kidnaped her pet dog.

"I don't know why he did that. Just pure devilishness, I guess. He was always doing things like that. One time he threatened to jump out of a window, which would have been all right—but he had my jewel box."

6. Her main objection to him was that he neglected her for other companions.

"I took an awful lot, but when he told me he couldn't go to a certain picture opening with me, then got me seats way off on the side of the house, I felt badly. When he walked down the aisle just before the picture started, to the seat of honor—that was worse. What made it unbearable was the fact that he was with the star of the picture!"

7. He'll never go any farther as a fighter.

"He'll never win that championship," is her parting shot. "The Carnera crowd knows that he won't stay in best condition—and they're just giving him plenty of rope to hang himself with—they they'll send Carnera in to push him over."

Which should be sweet music to the ears of Carnera and the crew that pilots the Brobdingnagian Bruiser.

Maryland Kennel Club Honors to Galen Kola

Baltimore, Feb. 4 (AP).—Champion Galen Kola, of Scotsward, Mrs. C. B. Ward's Welsh terrier from Florham Park, N. J., today carried the crown of the Maryland Kennel Club.

Champion Galen Kola, of Scotsward was chosen the best of winners by Joseph P. Sims, of Chestnut Hill, Pa., the judge, at the closing of the twenty-first Annual Dog Show here.

Winners in 30 different classes and in various divisions of each were picked by the committee of judges, headed by John E. Hurst, president of the club.

W.&L. Gridmen Open Spring Training

45 Men Are Expected to Report for Intial Drills Today.

LEXINGTON, Va., Feb. 4 (Spl.).—About 45 Washington and Lee football players will don moleskins tomorrow afternoon as they start preparations for the 1934 campaign.

The program for spring practice as Tex Tilson, who is starting his second year as head coach here, outlined it to the candidates at a meeting last week, calls for one hour and a quarter sessions on Wilson Field, five afternoons a week, until the start of the spring holidays, March 29. There will be no practice on Saturdays during the winter sports season, but later Tilson plans to have four or five intrasquad games for the benefit of the students.

15 Lettermen Back.

Fifteen lettermen are available for the 1934 team, but several of them will miss the first half of the spring training because of their connections with winter sports teams. The coach is requiring all freshmen football players to report regularly from the beginning, but members of last fall's varsity squad who are engaged in other sports now will not be asked to report for football until the end of the winter season.

Basket ball will delay the largest number of men in getting started on the gridiron. Charley Smith and Bill Ellis, ends; Chip Jones, Joe Pette and Jimmie Watts, backs, are members of the varsity cage team. Charlie Mower, end, and Lew Martin, and Ed Jean, guards, are on the boxing team. Wrestling claims Hugo Bonino, tackle, and Ed Seitz, center. George Glynn, center, is a varsity swimmer.

Cy Young, assistant coach of football and head coach of basket ball, will assist Tilson in directing the spring training after the close of the cage season.

Charity Card Brings Mat Battles

Browning and Garibaldi Top List of Gruelling Bouts for Thursday.

JUDGING from the pairings for Thursday night's rasslefest at the Auditorium, District mat fans have the most painless of opportunities of doing their bit for charity—part of the proceeds goes to the District Milk Fund—for the program promises just one knock-'em-down-drag-'em-out bout after the other.

The feature brings Jim Browning, one of the numerous title claimants, into action against Gino Garibaldi, a rough and tough Italian who long has been knocking at the door of the throne room but who has not quite been able to cross the threshold. With Browning the type of fellow who wades in and looks for trouble, the fur should fly in this bout, especially if the so-called champ manages to get his famous airplane leg-scissors on Garibaldi. So far, Browning has been able to throw all foes with this, his pet form of punishment. They may escape serious trouble occasionally, but, like the undertaker, he gets them in the end.

Rudy Faces Clinstock.

Second spot in the limelight has been assigned to Rough Rudy Dusek and Jim Clinstock. No further comment is necessary as to what may be expected here. But, rough and tough as is this pair, it is doubtful if this bout will have anything on the main preliminary.

It features Joe Malcewicz and George Zaharias. The latter's ability as one of the "killer" type of matmen is well known here, while Malcewicz showed that he can both take it and dole it out when he clashed against Rudy Dusek here recently. Since, Malcewicz almost ruined Jim Londos, champion of several sectors, in a bloody bout in Boston, finally succumbing due to a head injury received when he was tossed out of the ring. He easily outranks all of the rest of the older generation of maulers in speed, flash and roughness.

In the other bouts, Hans Kampfer, the German power-house, meets Charley Strack, of the villain class, and gentlemanly Paul Boesch will show how much punishment he can take from rough Marshall Blackstock before downing him.

Despite the fact that the show is a benefit one, women fans who bring paying escorts, will be admitted for half price.

Security Marts Boil Over on Dollar Move

Bonds Lead in Cheerful Trading; New Highs Recorded.

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Markets boiled this week, as President Roosevelt affixed his signature to the gold devaluation act of 1934, and decreed a dollar of 15 5-21 grains of gold.

Stocks and bonds boiled upward, scores of industrial issues again registered new highs since autumn or summer of 1931. The stock market bubbled the most briskly since July, and records had to be searched back to 1919 to find a week in which there was such activity in bonds.

But the dollar, perversely, boiled up, instead of foreign currencies. Rather than rising sharply against the dollar to the new parities indicated by decreeing of 15 5-21 grains of gold in each unit of the American currency, foreign currencies tumbled as the world rushed to buy the new dollar.

Substantial Price Gains.

Commodities hesitated for a time, but as the inflationary aspects of increasing the country's monetary gold base by nearly $3,000,000,000 were more widely understood, prices advanced substantially. Cotton at New York showed net gains for the week of $1.10 to $1.35 a bale and wheat at Chicago, 2 to 2⅜ cents a bushel.

Business news was largely bright. Dun & Bradstreet said January retail trade was unquestionably the best for that month in three years. Automobile output, textile mill operations and steel production all quickened, and railroads began to buy rolling stock in some volume for the first time in years.

The stock market encountered several waves of heavy profit taking, as the average for industrial issues pushed through the peak of last July to a new top since 1931, but the substantial technical reaction looked for by some market analysts failed to develop. Many corporate earnings reports presented favorable comparisons with the previous year.

U. S. Steel showed a sizable deficit for the final quarter of 1933, but its loss for the entire year was only about half that for 1932.

Conservative market observers still pointed to the exceptionally high prices of many leading shares in relation to current earnings, but Wall street remained predominatly bullish. The price index of 90 representative issues, including rails and utilities, advanced 4.6 points to 92, which was only 4.9 points from last July's top.

In bonds, the week's turnover exceeded $126,000,000 par value, and virtually all categories were higher. The bond market received a fresh fillip on Thursday, when the New York Federal Reserve Bank reduced its rediscount rate to 1½ per cent, from 2, the lowest rate in its history, and designed, among other things, to make short-term money rates so cheap as to force funds into long-term investments. That is, into bonds.

Trading in Bonds.

The trading in bonds was the largest since the last full week of 1919, when heavy trading in Liberties piled up a total of more than $150,000,000. Most of the trading this week was in corporate issues, and trading in that category was probably the largest in the history of the stock exchange.

The price index of 60 corporate issues advanced 2.5 points to 83.7, the highest since November 17, 1931.

Brokers' loans for the week ended January 31, according to the Federal Reserve's weekly tabulation, showed the exceptional rise of $109,000,000, the sharpest for any week since March of 1930, lifting the total of $888,000,000. A good part of this advance, however, was believed to have been caused by the Treasury financing. The monthly tabulation of borrowings by members of the New York Stock Exchange showed a January rise of only $57,900,000.

"Ceiling" Limit In Grain Stirs New Anxieties

Prices During Week Rise After U. S. Action on Dollar Value.

Chicago, Feb. 4 (AP).—Brand-new anxiety for the grain trade has been discovered—a "ceiling" in the wheat market.

By a "ceiling" is meant a situation that effectually appears to stop any by sky-rocketing of prices. In the present case, the "ceiling" referred to is likelihood of imports of wheat from Canada should the May delivery of wheat in Chicago rise to around $1 a bushel.

However, Canadian wheat is still much above an import basis, and the majority of traders here are inclined to give the prospect of imports but scanty attention.

Wheat Market Higher.

Helped by effects of the Presidential proclamation fixing a new value of the American dollar, the Chicago wheat market Saturday morning compared to a week ago was 1¾-2¼ cents higher, with corn unchanged to ½ advanced, oats ⅛-¾ up, and provisions showing 42 cents to 70 cents gain.

Whether the Chicago wheat market can advance materially above the prevailing level remains to be seen. May wheat in Buenos Aires is around 40 cents a bushel under the same delivery in Chicago, figured on the basis of current rates of exchange, with United States No. 2 red winter wheat quoted about 15 cents over May, F. O. B. New York, indicating an approximate difference of 55 cents a bushel between the American seaboard and Argentina.

Some observers have figured that the low price in the Southern Hemisphere might lead to imports but this has been scouted on the ground that the United States flexible tariff would intervene, a prospect apparently not so certain as to Canada in case of a sustained steep advance here.

New Speculative Business.

New speculative business coming into the wheat market is displaying a tendency to center on the July delivery, representing the 1934 crop, although most of the open contracts are still in May, which stands for wheat already on hand.

Millers and others are, meanwhile, being forced to draw on the domestic visible supply to a liberal extent, and this has reduced the total around 21,000,000 bushels in the past eight weeks, making the February 1 aggregate the smallest for that date since 1928. Friends of higher prices emphasize that every day now without rain Southwest and West is reducing the crop outlook for 13,000,000 acres of United States winter wheat having little or no reserve moisture supply.

Corn and oats prices are governed a good deal by the fact that the corn visible supply has remained almost stationary. Arrivals of corn are light, but appear to be about equal to industrial demand.

Provisions reflect upturns in the value of hogs.

Trade Agency Formed To Sell to Governments

Harold W. Phillips, executive counsel for the recently affiliated U. S. Board of Trade and the American Trade Council, announced yesterday establishment of the Trade Promotion Service, to act as a commission agency in the marketing of American products and supplies to the United States and foreign governments. The project is underwritten with "upwards of a million dollars."

The staff of the Trade Promotion Service, which will have headquarters at 744 Jackson place, will be composed largely of former Government attorneys, commercial attaches and translators, as well as "recognized authorities on production and marketing of commodities."

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Future of Private Ownership of Banks in This Country Rests Upon Desires of Administration, Not Underlying Economic Forces.

By Ralph West Robey.

Raymond Moley, in the current issue of his magazine "Today," devotes first place to a discussion by him of whether the Government should take over the banks. The piece is interesting primarily as an indication of the probable line of thought on this subject by the Adiminstration.

Of course Prof. Moley no longer is officially connected with the Administration, but anyone who follows "Today" scarcely can doubt that in no small measure it is a propaganda outlet just as truly as are the weekly broadcasts of Father Coughlin. It seems to me, therefore, that one is justified in taking this present analysis of the banking outlook by Mr. Moley as a likely reflection of White House views.

If this is the case it means that the Administration believes that in due time the Government will have to take over the banks. Such an outcome, however, is not to be through any obviously planned program, but because such action is an evitable concomitant of broad economic, financial and political trends. In other words, through a gradual evolution, as Moley sees it, we might "some day wake up to discover that while we still have banks, we also have new institutions which had taken over so many of their functions as to have supplanted banks, and that these new institutions were publicly owned."

Moley Lists Five Reasons Government May Absorb Banks.

The broad forces which are viewed by Moley as possibly leading to this result are summarized by him as:

(1) "The absorption of banking resources by the financial necessities of the new budget;

(2) "The movement of governmental credit agencies into fields abandoned by privately owned banks;

(3) "The limited supply of the kind of banking asset upon which, it is said, a sound banking system should be built;

(4) "The recognition by political forces of the fact that the control of credit is the control of the Nation;

(5) "The loss of self-confidence by the bankers themselves."

Taken in the aggregate, and without careful analysis, these points apparently make a strong case for probable ultimate Government ownership of banking in this country. Actually, however, only one of the five is of any compelling significance.

This is the thought underlying (4), namely, that an enormous power can be wielded by a political party if it can get control of the credit system of the country and consequently that it might be a shrewd move to work in this direction.

The contention that the needs of the new budget will absorb the banking resources to the point where these private financial institutions will be unable to meet commercial needs, and consequently, that business organizations will have to turn to the Government for credit, is sheer nonsense.

Of course, the borrowing program of the Government will absorb the lending power of the banks, and if carried too far will make it difficult for business to get credit, but this will not make it possible for the Government to step in and replace the banks.

In other words, the Government itself must get funds before it can lend to business organizations, and if the banks are completely loaned up, the source of such funds will disappear. The Government, accordingly, will not be able to step in, unless it is ready to start the printing presses.

Credit Fields Abandoned Because of Credit Risks.

The implications that banks are abandoning broad fields of credit is equally unsound as an argument for the Government taking over the banks. Such abandonment as there has been was the result of the credit risks in these fields being proved unsuited to the needs of banks. They would be equally unsuited to such needs if the banks were owned by the Government.

Maintaining that there is a declining volume of assets suitable for bank portfolios also is largely nothing more than a polite fiction that was developed to excuse banks before 1929 for going into speculative activities. Further, it should be recalled that even had there been a shortage of such assets in 1929, it does not follow that there will be henceforth. The number of banks in this country has declined by approximately 50 per cent in the last decade, so it should take a smaller volume of self-liquidating assets to support the existing institutions.

The final point, that the bankers have lost their self-confidence, is true to some extent. It is equally true that this Administration seems to be determined that they never shall regain much self-confidence.

Accordingly, this scarcely should be listed as an independent factor leading to the necessity of the Government taking over the banks. Rather, it should be presented as a means by which the Administration may be aided in accomplishing this end.

In a word, then, whether we continue to have a privately owned banking system in this country rests not upon whether the banks will perform their functions if given a chance, but upon whether the Administration wants to keep them from performing their function to the extent that it may be justified before the public, in time, in taking them over.

The present evidence is that the Government is looking forward without any dissatisfaction to the probability of a socialized banking system.

Arthur Young Is Made New U. S. Steel Official

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—The appointment of Arthur H. Young as vice president of the United States Steel Corporation in charge of industrial relations was viewed in steel circles today as indicating the new importance of industrial and employe relations in the industry under the NRA regulations.

Since 1924 Young had been director of Industrial Relations, Inc., of New York, a nonprofit organization which advises corporations on industrial relations. He also served for six years as manager of industrial relations for the International Harvester Co. His earlier connections were with the Illinois Steel Co., a subsidiary of U. S. Steel, and the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co.

New York, Feb. 4.—Exports of wheat (including flour as wheat) from United States and Canadian ports as reported to Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., for the week ended January 27, 1934, totaled 3,287,630 bushels, as compared with 5,191,770 bushels in the previous week and 3,500,361 bushels in the corresponding week of last year. Pecora Would Ban Market Gamblers

Also Urges Government Control of Exchange.

New York, Feb. 4 (AP).—Restriction of trading privileges to bona fide brokers and elimination from the New York Stock Exchange of "gamblers and speculators" was been urged by Ferdinand Pecora, counsel for the Senate Banking and Currency Committee.

Pecora advocated Government control of the exchange to make as difficult as possible speculating or gambling in securities with other people's money" and declared the flow of bank credit into the exchange should be stopped or curtailed to obviate "many mixed evils."

He spoke before the New York Real Estate Board, sharing the platform with Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia.

Sears, Roebuck Sales Rise.

Chicago, Feb. 4 (AP).—Sales of Sears, Roebuck & Co., chain store and mail order organization, in the fiscal period from January 2 to January 29 showed a gain of 30.2 per cent over the same period a year ago, Gen. R. E. Wood, president of the company, announced today. Sales were 20,386,475 compared with $15,661,617 a year ago.

Walt Mason, Himself

Careless Talk.

The wise man thinks before he speaks, he ponders his harangue; he knows that if fool language leaks, 'twill prove a boomerang. Impulsively we chase around and make our vain remarks, and then some morning we are found the prey of legal sharks. We sprung our little spiels in sport, intending nothing wrong, and now we must loom up in court, where criminals belong. We're charged with slander, it may be, with libel and such things, and all who've been there will agree that justice has its stings. And even if we should escape the lawyers and the law, remorse will come, in grievous shape, if we make speeches raw. Ill feeling dwells in every town because of careless talk; one fellow runs another down, while on his morning walk. Some people tell the other chap just what the first one said, and there is trouble on the map, the landscape's painted red. The man who talked has many friends, who promptly take his part; the other man pursues his ends with vengeance in his heart. And soon the people all are lined for war, on either side, and only turmoil you will find, where once peace did abide. I've seen some gorgeous village rows, I've seen disaster stalk, because some voters and their fraus were prone to careless talk. They meant no harm, but when they heard the ambulance come down, they realized how one fool word can spoil a happy town.
